Northwest leads way in housing study

by DAVE IBATA

The Northwest suburbs led most other Chicago area communities in the number of houses and apartments built during 1977, indicating a continuing flow of wealth to the region, according to a study released today.

The report on housing market indicators, prepared by Pierre de Vise of the School of Urban Sciences at the University of Illinois-Circle, Chicago, shows a high rate of construction in the Northwest suburbs to meet the demand for new housing by families migrating from older areas.

However, de Vise said several, older Northwest suburbs are running out of building room and eventually could face the same fate of stagnant growth and possible deterioration that now confronts close-in suburbs west and south of Chicago.

Families with money seek newer housing found in younger communities, such as Schaumburg, Hoffman Estates and Bartlett in the Northwest suburbs.

Schaumburg ranked first out of the 110 suburbs surveyed with 1,205 new single-family houses built during 1977.

IN TERMS OF rates per thousand of existing single-family units, Bartlett ranked second of the 110 suburbs, with 278 new homes built for every 1,000 existing homes. New single-family houses in Bartlett totaled 504.

Schaumburg ranked sixth, with a rate of 143 new homes per 1,000, while Hoffman Estates ranked tenth, with 90 per 1,000 and a total number of 498 new homes.

Carol Stream ranked first with 285 new housing units per thousand.

Wheeling, Mount Prospect and Schaumburg were counted among the top 10 suburbs with the highest number of new multifamily housing units built in 1977. Wheeling reported 550 new units; Mount Prospect, 458; and Schaumburg, 320.

Westmont ranked first in new apartments, reporting 823.

"Because of the preference for new housng, suburbs built up for 20 to 30 years are suffering," de Vise said. They're losing people who want to exercise their preference for new housing."

"This does give an advantage to

SADNESS AND A TINGE of pain show in the eyes of Peter Lewandowski, Chicago, as he peers from behind Old Glory, watching a protest by Vietnam veterans at Daley Plaza. Values of vets at war

by THOMAS LEE

It has left the rice paddies, college campuses and CBS Evening News, but the Vietnam War is still fought. It is fought in the halls of Congress, in VA hospitals and in mortgage clauses.

And Friday — at 11 a.m. on a sunny Nov. 11 — it was fought again.

The battlefield was outside Daley center in downtown Chicago. On one side stood veterans in suits and ties and Legionnaire caps. On the other stood veterans in ragged fatigues, wearing protest buttons and carrying banners.

Both sides wanted to remember, and both did remember. But neither remembered what the other did.

THOSE IN SUITS and ties remembered the good wars, buddies killed in action, battles fought for liberty. Those in fatigues remembered the bad war, napalm, and wondered when and where the next war will be fought.

"They want to use the blood of our dead brothers, who died in the service of the rich, to promote their next war," said Pete Zastrow, 38, of Chicago, who spent 1969 in Vietnam. He is a volunteer national coordinator for Vietnam Veterans Against the War, which called a protest Friday.

"The reason we're here is that those people — the American Legion, the VFW, the Congressmen and whoever else is here — are here to promote another war. Whether it starts in Panama, the Middle East or Southern Africa, they're here to promote

Angry taxpayers keep up battle

by BILL HILL

The backlash from hefty tax bill increases this summer is continuing in Arlington Heights, and there are signs it may grow.

Waging the attack on the various taxing bodies in the village is a group of residents calling themselves the Taxpayers Action Group. It has a board of directors with 15 members who represent eight homeowners' associations and various other sections of Arlington Heights that do not have organized homeowners' associations.

TAG's first battle was with the park district over plans to spend $576,000 on a golf course clubhouse. At two park district meetings more than 30 residents protested, saying the park district should not spend more than the $1.5 million approved for the golf course project in a referendum a year ago. The park board voted 3-2 to build the two-story clubhouse and now is seeking a bank loan for about $300,000 to finance the building.

THAT BATTLE ended two weeks ago, but about 20 TAG members were back again at the park board's meeting this week to ask more questions and watch the board's proceedings.

"We intend to follow through on the park district," said Pat Carbery, 1026 S. Chestnut Ave., who was one of the organizers of TAG. "We intend to show them that the taxpayers are no longer apathetic and that we no longer can afford to go first class," she said.

"I'm sure they were surprised the first time we showed up, but I think the real shocker came when we got five or six people out to a facilities committee meeting at 8 a.m., even though we weren't notified of the meeting until we read the newspaper at 6:30 a.m. And I don't think they expected to see us Tuesday since the vote on the clubhouse had been taken two weeks before," Mrs. Carbery said.

TAG members also have been attending school board and village board meetings, but have been less vocal than at the park district sessions.

ALL TAXING bodies in Arlington Heights can expect regular attendance at their meetings by TAG representatives, especially when budget hearings begin, said Douglas Cannon, 505 W. Maude Ave.

"The recent upsurge in local taxes brought the message home that we Begin pleads for peace in message to Egyptians

JERUSALEM (UPI) — Invoking the name of "our common father, Abraham" and quoting from the Koran, Prime Minister Menahem Begin Friday made a personal appeal to the Egyptian people for an "end to war, an end to bloodshed."

The unprecedented plea, which Begin's aides said he had been preparing since he took office, was addressed to the "citizens of Egypt" and appealed for the two nations to help one another achieve "peace, a real peace, and forever."

The statement did not mention U.S. mediation efforts or President Carter's call for reconvening the Geneva Middle East peace conference. It did not mention other Arab states.

"Citizens of Egypt," 'Begins appeal began, "this is the first time that I address you directly. But it is not for the first time that I think and speak of you. You are our neighbors and always will be."

"WE, THE ISRAELIS, stretch out our hand to you," Begin told the Egyptians.

"We do not want any clashes with you. Let us say one to another, and let it be a silent oath by both peoples, of Egypt and Israel: no more wars, no more bloodshed and no more threats.

"Let us not only make peace. Let us also start on the road of friendship, sincere and productive cooperation. We can help each other. We can make the lives of our nations better, easier, happier."

The statement, headlined "Address by Prime Minister Menahem Begin to Man arrested on drug, minors charges in Elgin

The residence of James F. Ackmann, 313 Lovell St., Elgin, was desolate Friday night.

For one of the few times in the last few months, it was quiet, a neighbor said.

Had it not been for a light in the picture window of the two-story house, the residence would have been completely hidden by darkness.

AS IT WAS, only Ackmann's dog was home.

Ackmann, 34, was arrested Thursday and charged with possession of marijuana, possession of a controlled substance, and three counts of contributing to the delinquency of a minor. He is being held on $25,000 bond in the Kane County Jall.

Elgin police said Ackmann used the marijuana to lure teen-age girls into his house to photograph them in the nude. Police said they found at least 500 pornographic pictures of young girls, $6,000 worth of marijuana and $100 worth of amphetamines in the house.

Three girls, two 14 and one 15 years old, were also arrested when they came to Ackmann's residence while police were there. Police said the girls came to buy drugs, and may be among the many girls they said posed for him. The girls were turned over to the custody of their parents.

Ackmann's arrest came after a three-month investigation by Elgin detectives and investigators of the Illinois Dept. of Law Enforcement. Police said neighbors had long complained about "suspicious activities" at his house.

Train blast hurts 1,000, levels S. Korea buildings

SEOUL, South Korea (UPI) — A freight train loaded with dynamite exploded in a catastrophic ball of flame south of Seoul Friday night, killing or injuring more than 1,000 persons, destroying 400 buildings and trapping another 700 persons under the fallen roof of a theater.

Reports reaching Seoul from the disaster scene said 45 persons were known dead with more than 1,000 more injured. Police said they expected the toll to rise.

The catastrophe occured late Friday at a railway station in the provincial town of Ire, 125 miles south of Seoul, when 700 boxes of dynamite and detonators exploded on a 12-car train waiting the leave the station.

An explosion in one car detonated explosions in the others in a deadly chain reaction that shook the streets, caused power to fail and reminded many Ire residents of the air raids during the Korean war.

The massive blast demolished the railway station, destroyed 400 buildings and heavily damaged 100 more, police aid. Some 700 people attending a musical at a local theater were also trapped under debris when the roof collapsed, according to reports from the scene.

Rescuers dug through the night to free them.

The explosion occurred shortly after 9 p.m.

Herald named winner

The Daily Herald has been named winner of the James Copley Memorial Award as the outstanding daily newspaper in northern Illinois.

The award, presented by the Northern Illinois Newspaper Assn. is in recognition of the newspaper's over-all excellence in all publishing areas. It is the second consecutive year The Daily Herald has won the contest. This year the Copley award also went to the Joliet Herald-News, Joliet.

The announcement was made Friday at the annual Northern Illinois Newspaper Assn. convention in DeKalb. Metropolitan Editor Jack Penchoff accepted the Copley plaque along with Herald awards in seven of the 10 contest categories.

Daily Herald first place awards were for excellence in photography and for excellence in newspaper design and appearance.

Second place awards were for best single local editorial and for over-all local sports reporting.

Living In Our Suburbs, a special section of profiles on Northwest suburban communities received third place in the Advertising Idea or Promotion category. The Daily Herald's Suburban Living section was awarded third place in the society section category, and an honorable mention was awarded Sugar 'n' Spice in the food and nutrition judging.

The Daily Herald's sister papers, the Paddock Publications weekly group of Mundelein, won four awards in the nondaily category.

Dutch fear German band of terrorists

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (UPI)) — Dutch officials said Friday they feared the capture of one member of West German's Baader-Meinhof gang in a shootout with police meant the terrorist band had expanded its base to the Netherlands.

Two men were wounded seriously in the gun-and-grenade battle outside their apartment in a fashionable suburb Thursday night. Three policemen also were injured but were reported in satisfactory condition.

Dutch officials identified the two captured men as Christian Michael Wackernagel, 26, and Gert Richard Schneider, 28. Schneider was reported near death.

DUTCH OFFICIALS originally had identified Schneider as Rolf Clemens Wagner, a Baader-Meinof member wanted along with Wackernagel in connection with the deaths in West Germany of businessman Hanns-Martin Schleyer, Public Prosecutor Siegfried Buback and Dresden Bank official Juergen Ponto.

However, the federal West German prosecutor in Karlsruhe, West Germany, said it had been "established beyond dough that one of the arrested men is not Wagner."

The German spokesman said that the other arrested man, Christopher Michael Wackernagel, "has been clearly identified."

After checking fingerprints, the German authorities said the man identified as Schneider was on the West German "most wanted" list but it was not immediately clear if he was a Baader-Meinhof member.

WEST GERMAN police said Wackernagel apparently was the television expert and cameraman for the Baader-Meinhof gang. They said they believed he took the films of Schleyer sent to newspapers, television stations and the government during his six weeks in captivity.

Schleyer was found shot to death last month following the freeing of hostages aboard a hijacked Lufthansa jet and the deaths in prison of three Baader-Meinhof leaders.

Gert Schneider

Christian Wackernagel

"What we feared has happened," Dutch Public Prosecutor Nicholaas Messchaert told a news conference Friday morning. "The Red Army (Baader-Meinhof) has expanded its activities to Holland."

The 11 p.m. shootout occurred outside the terrorists' apartment, where they had been living for almost a year, Meeschaert said.

Three plainclothes police, dressed in bulletproof vests and armed with carbines, approached when the two left their apartment — which had a telephone — to make a call from a public phone booth.

One of the officers rushed up to the booth ands said, "Will you hurry up, please. I need to use the phone."

"Moment please," the man answered in German, and produced a pistol and a shrapnel hand grenade, touching off the battle.

Begin pleads peace to Egyptians

the Egyptian People," came only two days after Egypt's President Anwar Sadat said he would "go to the Knesset" in search of peace.

"YOUR PRESIDENT said, two days ago, that he will be ready to come to Jerusalem, to our parliament — the Knesset — in order to prevent one Egyptian soldier from being wounded. It is a good statement.

"I have already welcomed it and it will be a pleasure to welcome and receive your president with the traditional hospitailty you and we have inherited from our common father, Abraham.

"And I, for my part will, of course, be ready to come to your capital, Cairo, for the same purpose: no more wars — peace — a real peace, and forever."

Turning to the ancient common bonds between their peoples, Begin quoted the Koran and the Old Testament to plead the Israeli case.

"IT IS IN THE holy Koran, in Surah 5, that our right to this land was stated and sanctified. May I read to you this eternal Surah:

" 'Recall when Moses said to his people: "Oh, my people, remember the goodness of Allah towards you when he appointed prophets amongst you. Oh my people, enter the holy land which Allah has written down as yours.' "

"It is in this spirit of our common belief in God, in divine providence, in right and in justice, in all the great human values which were handed down to you by the prophet Mohammed and by our prophets — Moses, Joshua, Jeremiah, Ezekial.

"It is in this human spirit that I say to you with all my heart: shalom," Begin said. "It means solh. And vice versa: solh means shalom."

The Hebrew and Arabic words mean peace in English.

THE SPEECH, which will be translated into Arabic and beamed to the Arab world on Israel's Arabic radio service, referred to the past three decades of war which Begin called "tragic, completely unnecessary.

"Much blood was shed on both sides. Many families were orphaned and bereaved, in Egypt and Israel.

"In retrospect, we know that all those attempts to destroy the Jewish state were in vain," Begin said. "And may I tell you, our neighbors, that so it will be in the future."

"We wish you well," Begin told the Egyptians. "In fact, there is no reason whatsoever for hostility between our peoples. In ancient times, Egypt and Israel were allies, real friends and allies against a common enemy from the north.

"Yes, many changes have taken place since those days, but perhaps the intrinsic basis for friendship and mutual help remains unaltered."

Israeli jets bomb south Lebanon

Israeli warplanes bombed southern Lebanon for the second time in three days Friday. Palestinian officials said the airstrike was aimed at a refugee camp but missed its target.

Both the Israeli government and witnesses in Lebanon said the attack came after Palestinian anti-aircraft positions fired on four Israeli jets flying reconaissance sorties over border villages destroyed in Wednesday's massive airstrike.

In Beirut, one radical Palestinian splinter group — the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine — said its anti-aircraft fire had downed one Israeli jet.

ISRAEL SAID none of its planes was hit during the 30-minute overflight.

A spokesman for the Palestine Liberation Organization said. "The planes tried to bomb (the Palestinian refugee camp at) Rashidiyeh. But heavy anti-aircraft fire and missle fire from our forces made the planes drop their bombs from a high altitude, from where they hit uncrowded areas outside the camp or fell into the sea."

A Lebanese reporter in the area said virtually all the bombs landed amid fruit trees in the Ras al Ain area just south of the camp.

The reporter said preliminary reports said 14 persons were wounded. He said there were no immediate reports of deaths.

THE FRINGES of Rashidiyeh, a camp just south of the ancient southern seaport of Tyre, were hit in the earlier air raid. There are military installations in the camp.

The Israeli military command said its warplanes hit a Palestinian surface-to-air missile position outside Tyre after being fired on.

The Lebanese witnesses said the anti-aircraft fire was never a serious threat to the Israeli jets, which were flying far overhead.

The Israeli jets also dove toward the guerrilla stronghold of Nabatiyeh, some nine miles from the southeast frontier with Israel, but were driven back by anti-aircraft fire, the Popular Front spokesman said.

Old, young veterans go to battle over values another war.

"THEY'RE TRYING to cover up the Vietnam War and Vietnam veterans. They won't even let us stand up there," Zastrow said, pointing across Washington Street to the podium on which dignitaries stood.

A few minutes earlier, Chicago police warned Zastrow that shouts by the 20-odd protesters would earn a disorderly conduct citation. Before that, Zastrow said, undercover police had pulled veterans holding a banner off the plaza and across the street. That was the closest the protest came to violence.

Across the way, Ed Damato was getting ready for the march to the eternal flame.

"We won't forgive and we won't forget," said Damato, also a Vietnam veteran, as a 21-gun salute went up.

"The way we see it, Veterans Day is used to bolster this idea of national honor, the idea that it's our interest to fight in wars for the rich — the banks and oil companies.

"WELL, A LOT of us went to Vietnam and saw firsthand that we weren't fighting for freedom and democracy. Instead we were fighting for Michelin rubber and Caltex. And we came back and vowed we would be vocal in our opposition to rich men's wars," Damato said.

"This is more than a war protest. The Legion is talking about how we must save our canal, and veterans benefits are being slashed. This is a protest against national honor and national unity. There is no honor. Our slogan is 'To Hell with national honor we won't be used again.' "

Just then another protester yelled "Atten-hut!" and a dozen former soldiers fell into line. Then they began marching toward the eternal flame, singing:

"We won't fight your wars no more,
"Rich man, rich man,
"We won't fight your wars no more,
"Rich man, your day is done."

THEY MARCHED toward the flame and when they got to it, they made speeches the same as Legionnaires had done a few minutes earlier. And they laid a wreath next to the flame, just like the Legionnairs. Only this wreath said, "We won't forgive, we won't forget."

A few steps away three men who wore Legionnaire's caps looked on, a pain in their eyes.

"Number one, it stinks," said one of them, August Martorana of Richton Park, who fought in the European Theatre of World War II. "But they've got the right to do whatever they want to do."

"Look at that," said another, Max Ottenfeld of Chicago, a veteran of World War I. "They're using the eternal flame. I didn't think they believed in the eternal flame."

"They believe in it," said Martorana. "They just haven't grown up yet."

USO to honor Gerald Ford

• Former President Gerald Ford will receive the USO-Los Angeles area's second annual Distinguished American Award Nov. 30. He will be honored "in recognition of his efforts in uniting the country during one of the most troubled eras in our history." The first recipient of the award was General of the Army Omar Bradley. Stars from the entertainment world, many on the committee that voted Ford the award, are expected to attend the award ceremonies to be at the Beverly Hilton Hotel in Hollywood.

• Miss Lillian was in Dublin, Ireland, with a bit of a chill Friday and was ordered by her doctor to rest in bed. Mrs. Carter, the 79-year-old mother of the President, was forced to call off her scheduled attendance at a fashion show. Spokesmen reported Miss Lillian had a raspy voice, that resulted from one too many social functions.

• Outgoing New York Mayor Abraham Beame met with President Carter Friday in Washington on Beame's forthcoming role in working on the administration's urban policy. Beame said he expected to be nominated formally in February to head the President's Advisory Committee on Intergovernmental Relations. He said he expects to work as a liaison between the state and mayors, and the federal government.

Northwest suburbs lead area in building suburbs that still have growing room, that can put up new subdivisions," de Vise said. "The Northwest suburbs of course have been the ones that have had the biggest housing boom in the past 20 years."

"But they are getting saturated," de Vise said.

DE VISE CITED Des Plaines, Mount Prospect and Arlington Heights as suburbs that are running out of open space and have little, if any, undeveloped land surrounding them for annexation.

In contrast, suburbs 25 miles or more west of the center of Chicago show the greatest potential for future growth, the report says.

However, de Vise said, lack of construction alone does not necessarily mean a suburb will deteriorate. As examples, he cited the built-up, affluent North Shore suburbs, and Barrington Hills, a suburb zoned for five-acre single-family lots, as areas with low building activity but high housing values.

In average home sale prices, the Northwest suburbs, with the exception of Barrington and Barrington Hills, reported values in the upper-middle range of the 110 communties.

Barrington Hills ranked first in the Chicago area with the highest average home sale price of $147,000. In the Northwest suburbs, Barrington ranked second with $93,400, followed by Libertyville with $78,800; Park Ridge with $74,000; and Arlington Heights with $68,900.

THE SOUTH SUBURBS reported the lowest housing values, with the exceptions of Flossmoor and Olympia Fields. The lowest average sales price was $34,800, reported by Park Forest.

* Statistics for Hanover Park, Inverness and Prospect Heights not reported.

Average sales prices for most South suburbs ranged from the mid-30s to the high-40s.

The cheapest house in Barrington Hills sold for $90,500, the report says. In contrast, Des Plaines and Elk Grove Village ranked in the top 10 in lowest single sales. Two homes priced at $21,000 each were sold in the two communities.

A large range between lowest and highest prices paid for a house indicates a diversity of choices, the report says.

"They tend to be older, established, fairly large-size suburbs of high socioeconomic status characterized by a wide range of age and grade of housing," de Vise said.

Palatine ranked ninth of the suburbs with the largest range of housing prices, with a ratio of 6.5 between a lowest sales price of $25,200 and a highest sale price of $162,000.

Fumes send workers to hospital

AURORA, Ill. (UPI) — Fumes overcame dozens of workers at an electronics firm Friday, forcing the evacuation of 400 employes and the closing of the production area of the plant.

Forty-three employes of BRK Electronics, which manufactures smoke and fire alarms, were taken in private cars and ambulances to Copley and Mercy Center hospitals for treatment and observation. Many of the victims were treated with oxygen and released. None of the injuries was serious.

Two women employes passed out at about 10:45 a.m., said Dennis Clair, industrial products manager of BRK. The production area of the plant, employing about 400 persons, then was evacuated.

"Everybody seems to be in pretty fair condition,' Clair said. "Speculation by the fire department and gas company is that some construction is going on adjacent to the rear of the building and exhaust from a couple of the trucks was sucked into our fresh air intakes.

"I walked personally through the plant and I did not detect any odors. very possibly it could have been carbon monoxide," Clair said.

About 600 are employed at the plant. The sales and administrative offices were kept open.

GOP election never assured, slatemakers told Republicans no longer can take their election to the Cook County Board for granted, GOP slatemakers were warned Friday night.

"We can no longer take these offices for granted nor can we take for granted the over one million voters in suburban Cook County, said William Griffith of Arlington Heights.

Griffith appeared before Republican slatemakers seeking their endorsement as a candidate for the Cook County Board. But he left saying he has not ruled out an independent campaign if not slated.

GRIFFITH WAS an unsuccessful Republican candidate for the Metropolitan Sanitary District in 1976.

All six suburban members of the county board are candidates for reelection and are considered likely to be reslated by the 30 township committeemen who make the party endorsement.

Suburban members of the county board, although a minority, can "spotlight inefficient or inadequate administrative procedures," Griffith said.

Also appearing before the slatemakers was County Comr. Carl Hansen, of Mount Prospect, who told slatemakers that Republicans have had some successes in the political wars with the 10 Chicago Democrats on the county board.

Specifically, Hansen cited county Board Pres. George W. Dunne's decision to withdraw his proposal for a countywide employe head tax, the punch card voting system now used in suburban Cook County and current proposals for real estate tax reform in the county.

"IT WAS FRUSTRATING to be in a minority position on a legislative body where it is virtually impossible to detach a vote from the other side," Hansen acknowledged. He cited Republican opposition to the county gasoline and liquor taxes and also said Republicans often had proposed savings in the cost of operating county government.

Altogether 10 candidates were expected to present themselves as candidates for the county board, including the six incumbents. Slatemakers also heard from a number of persons seeking to run for circuit court judge from the suburbs.

The committeemen will meet again in closed session to make their endorsements, which then will be ratified by the Republican central committee slatemakers. at a meeting Nov. 23.

Cab firm records to be audited: mayor

Chicago Mayor Michael A. Bilandic said Friday financial reports submitted by the two largest cab companies in applying for a recently granted fare increase are being audited for possible discrepancies. He said the possibility of discrepancies was called to his attention in a memo from Consumer Sales Commissioner Jane M. Byrne. The 1976 financial reports were submitted to the City Council by Yellow Cab Co. and Checker Taxi Co. Inc. last summer to support their contention they needed a fare increase to stay in business. Bilandic said he has ordered Mrs. Byrne to proceed with an audit of the reports, since "some figures have the appearance of not being consistent with the year before." "I won't hesitate to do whatever is appropriate with the results," Bilandic said. The Federal Trade Commission has been investigating the fare increase and has subpoenaed a dozen aldermen to appear before a panel concerning the increase. An 11 per cent fare increase was approved by the City Council last July, which raised basic cab fares from 50 cents to 85 cents but eliminated the 20-cent extra passenger charge.

RTA riders periled lives: Buck

Hundreds of Rapid Transit riders were allowed to walk on the tracks Oct. 24 even though power in the electrified third rail was left on, spokesman Thomas Buck of the Chicago Transit Authority said Friday. An evening rush hour train was blocked between Bryn Mawr and Thorndale by a stalled train for more than an hour and apparently some of the passengers got tired of waiting, Buck said, and jumped off the train. The train crew reportedly did not try to keep the passengers on the train or notify the CTA traffic control center of what was happening, he said.

Ex-East Hazel Crest official dead

Former East Hazel Crest Public Works Supt. Stanley J. Niemiec, 55, was found fatally shot at his home in the southern suburb, police confirmed Friday. Niemiec's body was found late Thursday with a bullet wound in his back and was pronounced dead on arrival at Ingalls Memorial Hospital, Harvey. No weapon was found, Village Sgt. Greg Szymanski said. No motive for the slaying was announced.

Midland jury still debates case

Deliberations are scheduled to resume today in the case of Ronald G. Molter, charged with the slaying of Marilyn Goodman, 18, of Mount Prospect, last May near the campus of Northwood Institute in Midland, Mich. The jury has been dliberating since Thursday.

Phi Kappa's chug-a-lug-a kegger

Members of Northern Illinois University's Phi Kappa Sigma fraternity in DeKalb said they will transport an empty beer keg to Milwaukee by hand this weekend to raise money for a Chicago charity. Fraternity spokesman Larry Eckert said the students are accepting pledges, either for a certain amount of money for each mile they travel or for a set amount for the entire journey. Proceeds will go to the Children's Institute for Developmental Disabilities. The rules of the stunt permit toting the keg in knapsacks or by hand but not transporting it in vehicle, the fraternity said. The keg will be delivered to the Miller Brewing Co.

2 jail guards forced out: chief

Some of the guards who did not report to work at the Joliet Correctional Center the last two days were forced into it, Warden Dennis Wolff said they told him Friday. Twenty-one guards called in sick Wednesday and Thursday in an apparent show of sympathy for guards at Stateville who staged a walkout last week. Wolff said about half the guards who called in sick said they did so because they were threatened with violence by other guards. Nineteen guards called in sick for the Friday morning shift, he said, but only two called in sick on the afternoon shift.

Taxpayers still waging attacks on local groups have to pay more attention to what our local taxing bodies are spending," Cannon said.

Cannon said the park board's attitude during the clubhouse meetings was "perceived as total arrogance."

"They definitely were unprepared for us and it was obvious they had not done their homework," Cannon said.

Exchanges between park commissioners and TAG members often were heated and unfriendly. Park Board Pres. Jacqueline Grunewald called the criticism from TAG speakers "low blows" and described the TAG movement as "a very calculated, planned effort to make us look like we don't know what we're doing."

PARK DIRECTOR Thomas Thornton said the group is "too negative about everything."

"It appears they'd like to do away with government and anything to do with taxes. They hammer away at the same points over and over. It gets ridiculous after awhile," Thornton said.

The park board does appear to be TAG's primary target for right now. The group is studying the legal aspects of placing the park district under the jurisdiction of the village "because they are spending exorbitant amounts of money," Mrs. Carbery said.

"Maybe if we could consolidate buildings, equipment, services, etc., the taxpayer could be the beneficiary," she said.

Limitations on spending by all local taxing bodies is the main goal of TAG, Mrs. Carbery said.

"We want to make all levels of government more fiscally responsible," she said. "No one has been watching them because people never really cared until they got reassessed and got those whopping increases. They care now and they are aware that some (taxing bodies), such as the park district, are overspending."

CRITICISM OF the park board by TAG members during the clubhouse controversy often upset park commissioners.

"On a couple occasions there were some low blows. It's pretty hard to sit there and be criticized and have your character abused," Park Comr. Robert Rohleder said.

"I'm pleased to see the interest from the citizens. I think we need some more time in working with them and I think they need to be better informed," Rohleder said. "I'd like to keep the meetings on a professional plane. I hope they don't dwindle down to a shouting match," he said.

Kathryn Graham, another park commissioner, has been most critical of TAG. She suspects there is outside money supporting TAG, possibly the National Taxpayers United of Illinois.

"I think the people in the group (TAG) are being duped. I think they're being used. They don't even know who's behind it getting them organized," Mrs. Graham said.

"I think they're trying in one way or another to discredit all the local officials. I thought I'd never say anything like that because it makes me sound as radical as them, but I feel this way very strongly," she said.

MRS. GRAHAM complained that some TAG members are hostile and are "using the park board as their forum for their own pet peeve."

"To some of them, it's just a game," she said.

TAG members disagree and insist they are not affiliated with the National Taxpayers United of Illinois, which was formed this summer and led an unsuccessful taxpayers strike in Cook County.

Members for TAG are being recruited by word of mouth and through homeowners' associations with $1 annual dues requested to offset the group's expenses.

"We are soliciting members from all over town because we need bodies to monitor all of these taxing bodies," Mrs. Carbery said.

"We intend to be vocal and involved in all taxing bodies which affect our over-all tax bill, even if it takes lobbying to change present legislation regarding their taxing limits," she said.

'Slap on the wrist' is surprise to area family

by DEBBE JONAK

No one has offered to pay for the $9,000 damage six Prospect Heights boys did to the Gerald Schubring home in July.

Only one parent even bothered to apologize.

And although the youths finally were convicted of the crime this week, the court was lenient. They got probation or court supervision.

The Schubrings are wondering whether they have received justice.

"I think it was just a slap on the wrist," Mrs. Schubring said. "For all they did here, it should have been more than that."

DESPITE THE COURT hearings and publicity surrounding what police called the worst case of vandalism they have ever seen, the Schubrings remain in the dark about why their home was virtually destroyed while they were on vacation.

"The one mother I talked to said she asked her boy why. He had no reason," said Mrs. Schubring, 1008 W. Wildwood Dr. "I guess it was just something to do, a lark — let's go wreck the Schubrings."

The six boys, all from the Schubrings' neighborhood, were found guilty Wednesday of criminal trespass and vandalism in a closed hearing before Judge James Walton of Cook County Juvenile Court.

Three of the youths were placed on one-year probation, two under one-year court supervision and one under six months court supervision. It was the first criminal offense for the boys, who range in age from 10 to 14. The court did not order restitution be made.

In the vandalism attack, the contents of drawers and the freezer were strewn everywhere, furniture was slashed, mirrors and windows smashed. Oil was poured over the interior of the Schubrings' car. There was a gaping hole in one wall.

THE SCHUBRINGS' insurance paid for $7,500 of the damage, which the company will attempt to recover from the youths' parents. More than $1,000 came out of the Schubrings' pocket. When the incident was first reported, the damage was estimated at $20,000.

Because it was such a devastating crime, the Schubrings said they don't understand why they were not told about Wednesday's hearing. They learned of the conviction through a reporter.

2 guilty of selling U.S. Navy secrets

Accused spies Lutz Carl Weischenberg and Carl John Heiser III were convicted Friday of conspiring to sell secret U.S. Navy Cruise Missile navigational gyroscopes to the Soviet Union and East Germany. A seven-man, five-woman federal court jury deliberated more than nine hours before also convicting Weischenberg, a 33-year-old German businessman, of failing to register as an agent for a foreign government. Defense attorneys said they would file motions for a new trial, a necessary step before they can appeal the surprise verdict. U.S. District Judge Joe Eaton, who said he felt Heiser and Weischenberg had "an excellent chance of acquittal," deferred sentencing pending a background investigation.

Child sex abuse common: center

Sexual abuse of children has become increasingly common and the perpetrator is often a parent, a neighbor or a family friend, reports Children's Hospital National Medical Center. "Because of the taboos, our knowledge is at a primitive level," said Dr. Frederick Green, associate director of the hospital, in announcing a national project to study and combat children's sexual abuse. Experts believe two cases of childhood sexual abuse — ranging from adult exhibitionism or "flashing," to fondling, genital contact, sodomy, intercourse and rape — go unreported for every case referred for medical care or police investigation. One reason, Green said, is the molester often is not a stranger, but a parent, a neighbor or a family friend.

U.S. to ban small baby rattles

The government said Friday it intends to ban baby rattles that are small enough to get caught in an infant's throat. It said this includes three-fourths of the rattles currently on the market. The Consumer Product Safety Commission, in proposing the ban, said the public will have 30 days to submit written comments on it. After reviewing the comments, the Commission will make a final decision on whether to carry out the ban. The commission said that since 1974 eight babies have choked to death on rattles and at least 10 others have been involved in choking incidents. The rattles associated with these incidents, it said, generally were about four inches long and shaped like telephone receivers, bar bells, clothes pins and safety pins.

Koreans seize Japanese boat

North Korean patrol boats hve seized a Japanese fishing vessel for the first time in two years for possible violation of the communist country's 200-mile economic zone, the Japanese Maritime Safety Agency reported Friday. The agency said the fishing vessel No. 87 Chidori Maru radioed its regional office shortly before North Korean authorities seized it 194 miles east of the North Korean coastal city of Hungnam early Thursday. "We are being taken by North Korean patrol boats," said the message from the Japanese ship, which specializes in the catching of squid and has 10 crewmen. Maritime Safety officials said they believe the Japanese ship was detained because of a possible violation of North Korea's 200-mile fishing zone, which went into effect Aug. 1.

Chinese workers to get raises

Wang Ya-ti, who earns $22.80 a month as a lathe operator, is getting a raise, China announced Friday. So are 100 million other industrial and service workers in China — their first in six years. For the first time since 1971, Chinese authorities have announced a wage increase covering almost half of the nation's non-agricultural work force. A veteran of almost 10 years in the machinery shop, Miss Wang qualifies for a pay raise under guidelines announced Friday for 46 per cent of the nation's industrial workers, those in commerical and service trades, teachers, scientific and technical personnel, medical workers, literary and art workers and government bureaucrats. The announcement by the New China News Agency said the emphasis in awarding pay increases, retroactive to Oct. 1, "is on those workers and staff with many years of working experience who receive fairly low pay. Those who receive 90 yuan and up are not included."

Flu type up in air: doctors

ATLANTA (UPI) — Federal health officials said Friday it was too early to predict which influenza virus will predominate this winter or how effective the currently recommended vaccine will be.

Dr. Philip Graitcer, an influenza surveillance officer with the national Center for Disease Control, said so far this fall A-Victoria and A-Texas strains of flu have been detected. He said there have not been enough cases of the disease to indicate which will be the most prevalent during the upcoming flu season.

In Puerto Rico, however, the scene of an ongoing epidemic, the CDC said the A-Texas virus caused the illness, widespread in ehe eastern and central parts of Caribbean island.

CDC's extensive influenza surveillance system has reported cases of flu also in Florida and Oregon and in Canada, South America and Australia.

ILLNESS CAUSED by A-Victoria and A-Texas viruses is no more severe than other recent types of influenza, according to health officials. But vaccinations, available this fall and winter only through private physicians, were being recommended for the elderly and those with chronic health problems, both groups being particularly susceptible to the disease.

Despite the fact that the A-Texas strain predominated in the Puerto Rico outbreak, Graitcer said this does not necessarily indicate it will be prevalent in the United States this winter or cause epidemics.

"There are reports right now of other viruses around, like A-Victoria," he said. "It's too early to tell. We don't have enough cases." He said CDC flu surveillance officers hope within the next few weeks to get a better idea of which flu strain, if any, will move to the front and the effectiveness of the vaccine against the A-Texas strain.

THE A-VICTORIA strain of influenza showed up in the United States in February 1976 and caused a late winter-spring nationwide epidemic. It returned last winter, along with a new, closely related variety, which was labeled A-Texas following an outbreak at an Air Force base in Texas.

Although there were indications the vaccine currently recommended by federal health officials is better than 80 per cent effective against A-Victoria, its potency against A-Texas remained a question mark.

The recommended A-Victoria and B-Hongkong vaccine was expected to give some protection against A-Texas, however, because the viruses are similar in their genetic structure.

For Baha'i, ritual gets in the way

John Lampinen

Byline report

There are no candles to light.

No presents to wrap and no trees to decorate. No holy wine to drink. No awesome ministers in clerical robe to hand down the gospel.

In fact, wile the Baha'i Faith celebrates the birth of its prophet Baha'u'llah today, there practically is no ritual at all.

It is no vacuum lightly conceived. The lack of ritual is as much a part of the Baha'i Faith as the existence of it is a part of most others.

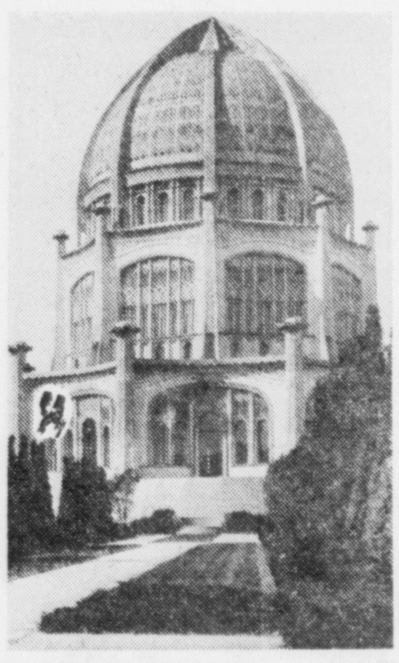
AFTER ALL, Baha'is believe in the unity of man, in the concept that all religions worship the same God. If anything, they figure, ritual just gets in the way.

"Rituals tend to get between the believer and God," says Steve Wilder of Wheeling. "They tend to become mechanical. You get to doing them automatically, and after a while, you do them, and you forget why you're doing them."

Wilder is one of a growing number of Baha'is living in the Northwest suburbs. There are clusters of them in almost every community, with groups organized in Arlington Heights, Schaumburg, Elk Grove Township, Mount Prospect, Des Plaines, Wheeling, Palatine, Buffalo Grove and Prospect Heights.

And today is the most important holiday on the Baha'is 19-month calendar.

It is the birthday of Baha'u'llah, who was born Mirya Husayn-'Ali in Persia Nov. 12, 1817. The celebration of the occasion actually began Friday night and will end tonight because the Baha'i day starts and ends at sunset.



THE BASIC PRECEPTS of the religion, based on 100 volumes of Baha'u'llah's writings, are that all religions honor the same God, that God wants a united society and that the highest from of worship is service to other human beings.

Baha'u'llah was, Baha'is believe, the latest of a series of prophets sent by God.

But while Baha'is also believe that there were other prophets, including Abraham, Moses, Jesus Christ and Muhammad, there is no official observance of their births.

"Baha'u'llah being the renewal of the message of God to mankind, we commemorate it," says Brian Walls of Schaumburg. "The message that comes from God is the same, but it is renewed. The new manifestation of God can tell us more."

Most Northwest suburban Baha'is will be celebrating Baha'u'llah's birth in Wilmette where the National House of Worship was constructed in 1953.

There is no particular rite during the observance. This year, a pianist and composer will make a musical presentation and the religion's former public information officer will speak.

DEVOTIONS, that began this morning, will include discussion of Baha'u'llah's writings and prayer.

It is similar to the "19-day Feast' that comes the last day of each Baha'i month. It is a feast of local spiritual assemblies, says Wilder but it is not the Thanksgiving type. It is a "spiritual feast," he says, and the only food are a few cookies and maybe a slice of cake for the social period.

That is not to say there are no rituals. Usually, Baha'is give gifts during the Intercalary Days, those four or five days at the end of the Baha'i calendar in spring that are needed to fill out the year.

And even sans ritual, the "oldest new religion" is gaining followers, although not in gigantic proportions. Local assemblies are cropping up in the suburbs. There are 963 of them throughout the country.

The followers cite a number of reasons for the growth: the need for more relevant teachings that a modern prophet can provide, the noncommercialism, the philosophy for change in the world. But generally, it boils down to one thing.

"PEOPLE ARE REALLY looking, searching," Mrs. Hannen says.

Pat Klem of Buffalo Grove was raised a Catholic in Texas. Later, however, her father and two brothers died in the same year, and when she went to the church for counseling, she says, she did not like what the priest told her.

"So I started searching," she says. "I always thought there was something wrong with me because there were a lot of things in the church I didn't agree with. (When I heard the Baha'i Faith), I wondered, why didn't they ever let us investigate these other faiths since they're all the same?"

Her children are ages 1, 7 and 12, and they get the opportunity to investigate other religions. It has nothing to do with whatever frustrations Mrs. Klem may have felt.

It is a church doctrine. Children are not baptized. Their parents are told to exose them to all religions.

"I have my own children now," she says. "I want them to become Baha'is. If they didn't become Baha'is, I would be disappointed. But they have to have the choice."

another savings & loan. just what we need. WRONG!

When we decided to open a new office in Rolling Meadows, we knew that you already had many, many alternative places to keep your checking and savings accounts. We knew that to earn your confidence and your business, we would have to be different... and better than any of the other banks and savings associations which were already here.

This area, we knew, does not need "just another savings and loan."

We plan to be different in the kinds of services we offer, the kinds of accounts we provide and even the kinds of premium gifts we give to savers.

We'll soon be opening our doors, and we'll be telling you more specifically just what it is that makes us different. Watch for our messages. We plan to tell you why, when you think money, think Security.

Medical students abroad in limbo as battle rages

American medical schools have locked horns with the federal bureaucracy in a controversy that has put millions of dollars and the principle of academic freedom on the line.

At stake in the controversy is the future of hundreds of U.S. students enrolled in foreign medical colleges.

The issue is whether the schools in this country can be forced to accept qualified Americans who have received part of their medical education at foreign universities.

"It's kind of like forced busing for the medical schools. It's not ideal, but it is a way to get a job accomplished," says Dr. Margaret Bischel, medical education director at Lutheran General Hospital, Park Ridge, and one of the few educators willing to say she likes the idea of mandatory transfer for Americans in foreign medical schools.

THE HEALTH Professions Educational Assistance Act of 1976 requires U.S. medical colleges to accept a quota of foreign transfer students as a condition of receiving government money, called capitation grants, which this year amounted to $118 million.

The law has so incensed university deans that many schools, including Northwestern University, the University of Chicago and the University of Illinois, have announced they will give up the federal dollars rather than be told they must admit particular students.

Academic freedom is at stake, the schools say, insisting they be permitted to accept or reject transfer applications.

On the other side of the issue is the federal government which has determined there is a need for more doctors in the United States and hundreds of Americans marooned in foreign medical colleges where they enrolled because they were denied admission to schools in this country.

The students say they are outcasts in the close-knit American medical profession, unfairly discriminated against because they had to get their medical training outside the United States.

THEIR COMPETENCY to transfer to U.S. schools is guaranteed, they say, by the fact they must pass part one of a three-part medical board examination, usually taken at the end of their second school year, before they are eligible to transfer. Slightly more than half do pass.

"My own sympathies are with the students who are trying so hard to be physicians," Dr. Bischel says. "Just because you're in a foreign medical school shouldn't mean you're a second class citizen."

Kurt Baer

Byline report

Dr. Bischel heads a program at Lutheran General Hospital called Fifth Pathway that is designed to help American graduates of foreign medical schools get residence positions at U.S. hospitals.

A total of 947 U.S. Citizens are eligible to make the switch from a foreign to a U.S. medical school, including 26 Illinois residents. Most of them are studying in Mexico.

For most students, the transfer would come after two years of foreign study.

DOUGLAS OUTCALT of the American Medical Student Assn. and Foundation, Schaumburg, said the association supports assimilation of foreign-trained American medical students, but opposes mandatory admission to U.S. schools.

"As currently written, were opposed to the federal law. But if it were rewritten so that there could be an increase in the third year class, but schools still would be able to apply their own admission standards, we would support it," Outcalt says.

U.S. Rep. Paul Rogers, D-Fla., is sponsoring a bill to change the quota requirement of the present law. The amendment he proposes would require U.S. medical schools to expand the size of their third year class by 6 per cent each year to accommodate foreign transfers.

The bill is being touted a a compromise. But even if it is passed by Congress, it remains to be seen whether mandatory class size increases will be any more acceptable to U.S. colleges than the present quotas.

There is one additional worry, Outcalt says. Besides losing capitation grants, students fear the government will cut off federally-insured student loans at schools which refuse foreign transfers. "The government's health professions student loan program will be about the only loan program going," Outcalt says.

A SPOKESMAN for the medical school at the University of Illinois, Chicago-Circle, estimated the school would have had a quota of 25 to 40 transfer students next year. It now has an enrollment of 1,247 students.

The University of Illinois' refusal to accept those students will cost it $1 million to $1.5 million in federal grants annually, the spokesman said.

In a recent letter to the U.S. Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare, Northwestern University Pres. Robert H. Strotz said: "We shall not relinquish our right to use academic qualifications in admission decisions. We protest any attempt to infringe on this fundamental right and in our view, such an attempt cannot well serve the purpose of the capitation grants."

Northwestern has been carrying out a voluntary program of foreign school transfers for years, admitting about 12 such students each year, Strotz says.

"HEW seems to be saying, 'Now that you've become accustomed to federal support we want to tell you how to run the school.' "

"THE PARTICULAR insistence that academic qualification be ignored is a hazard to the quality of future medical practice and is the sort of thing the Gang of Four might well have invented for Red China," Strotz says.

There is substantial political muscle behind efforts to end the mandatory transfer rule. The American Medical Assn. is on record as opposed to the present law, and the Assn. of American Medical Colleges, another powerful Washington lobby, also wants it changed.

HEW Sec. Joseph A. Califano Jr., says he hopes there can be a compromise between the medical schools and the mandatory transfer requirement. "We didn't think the present law was appropriate legislation at the time it was passed," he says.

In the meantime, Americans in foreign medical colleges remain in limbo, pursuing their transfer applications without assurance the federal government can help them, and with suspicion that the educational deck is stacked against them.

Student seeks accountability in system

Brad Robertson is a cause without a constituency, an American in a foreign medical school.

Robertson's story is real. But his name has been changed because he believes his outspoken opinions on the foreign school transfer issue could cause him to be blackballed by the U.S. medical schools to which he hopes to transfer.

"There are very few people willing to stand up to the system," Robertson says of his fellow American students enrolled in foreign medical school such as the one at Guadalajara, Mexico. "The guy who tries to oppose the system, however moral his position, is in tremendous danger of retribution. If his criticism is too sharp and too public, schools will refuse his application for any kind of transfer."

ROBERTSON, a graduate of Arlington High School, never really planned to go to medical school until a family tragedy stirred in him an intense personal interest in medicine. By that time he was too old, 31, to have much of a chance of getting into a U.S. school, he says.

So he went to Guadalajara "without much of an idea of the things that faced me," he admits. But his experience there turned him into an advocate of the American in a foreign school and a critic of what he calls the medical bureaucracy that has grown up in the United States in the past 20 years.

A part of that bureaucracy is the Assn. of American Medical Colleges, Robertson says.

"The officers at some U.S. medical schools won't even discuss the issue of foreign transfers with you. It is unthinkable that you would question their policies. The realities of medical practice in the United States in 1977 means nothing to them. Theirs is the attitude of the old private club.

"THE KEY WORD here, and it comes up over and over again, is accountability. And these people are not accountable," Robertson says.

The federal government's mandated transfer program is evidence of that missing accountability, he says.

Robertson defends the transfer of qualified Americans from foreign schools on the merits of those students, while acknowledging that, in most instances, foreign medical school education is inferior to that in the United States.

To be considered for transfer, foreign medical school students must pass the first part of a national examination almost inspite of hostile environment, he says. The result is that those students who do pass are intelligent, dedicated and self-motivated.

"The U.S. schools are getting such a sterling person back when they accept anyone who has been able to pull himself up by his bootstraps to pass the boards," he says.

"We have a saying that you could be Joe DiMaggio, Jesus Christ and Albert Einstein rolled into one, and they could still find a reason to reject you."

BILL BERGER of LaGrange and his children check out the model trains at the Christmas Garden and Toy Fantasy Show in McCormick Place.

Games lacking; kids toy around with pet python

by TONY GINNETTI

So you can't think of a gift for Uncle Elmo, the family cut-up who last Christmas offered you a gift choice of an ounce of imported perfume or an ounce of coffee because they cost the same.

Well, how does a 12-foot, 70-pound snake (pardon the expression) grab you?

Actually, the marble colored, 7-year-old Burmese python isn't for sale. But Phoenix, that's her name, proved to be one of the more interesting sights Friday night at the opening of the first Christmas Garden and Toy Fantasy Show in McCormick Place.

PHOENIX BELONGS to Tim Cole, 20, of Barrington Hills, and was impressing the youngsters passing the Chicago Herpetological Society booth.

The python's not for sale, and even the society members probably would be hard-pressed to explain what a snake and a reptile club are doing in a Christmas show. So why did they come?

"They asked us to," Cole said, "They" being Wintergreen Inc., who also produce the annual Chicago Flower Show.

The curious boys who ventured near Phoenix' glass-enclosed case didn't seem bothered by the lack of a Christmas theme. They were more concerned with whether she would bite.

(She doesn't.)

Cole has owned the 7-year-old constrictor for a month, the snake being a gift from a friend who raised her. Phoenix is only one of Cole's seven pet snakes, but certainly she was the most awe-inspiring on display.

Her competition wasn't all that tough, though. How can a miracle vegetable mixer or a basement waterproofing system or a recliner massager compare to a rabbit-eating serpent?

There were some other things the kids seemed to enjoy even if their parents tended to mutter loudly about the shortcomings of the show. The kids still had a storybook theater, a chance at a donkey ride, and of course, the cotton candy.

Still, they might have wondered about the lack of toy displays, but at least they had the snakes.

Not a good gift, you say? Don't tell that to the guy who was asking Cole about prices that pet stores charge for snakes.

Watch out, Uncle Elmo.

Churches upset with financial disclosure moves

David E. Anderson

World of religion

"Philanthropy has got to survive and it's not gong to unless there is full disclosure — and that includes the churches."

That is the blunt conclusion of Mal Gross, a partner in the prestigious accounting firm of Price, Waterhouse and Co., and the only top Certified Public Accountant who spends full time worrying about accounting procedures, financial disclosure and nonprofit organizations.

Right now Gross, who describes himself as a "crusader" on the subject, is the target of much rancor by some religious organizations for the role he is playing as chairman of the American Institute of Certified Public Accounts subcommittee on accounting principles and reporting practices for nonprofit organizations.

THE SUBCOMMITTEE — it really is a committee of CPAs from 11 top firms — has issued a tentative set of principles and practices for nonprofit organiations such as trade associations, labor unions, condominium management associations, museums and religious organizations.

Not surprisingly, the set of principles, which would be informally binding on CPAs if approved by the ACIPA, has drawn a small mountain of comment from interested and affected parties, not least the churches and other religious organizations.

The heart of the proposed set of principles is to bring financial reporting by nonprofit organizations into line with "generally accepted accounting principles" and in particular the requirement that organizations report on the "accrual basis" of accounting rather than the cash basis.

Accrual accounting means that in addition to recording transactions resulting just from receipt and disbursement of cash, the amount owed to an organiation and its debts would also be listed in a financial statement.

THE IDEA, SAYS Gross, is to provide a set of financial records that fairly reflect the actual financial situation of the organization and that "can easily be understood by a grandmother" deciding whether or where to send her $5 contribution.

A number of church groups have opposed the tentative principles on the basis that religious organizations are unique, that the principles would be burdensome, and that, as the Roman Catholic response said, constitutional law "sharply distinguishes churches, for certain financial purposes from all other nonprofit organizations."

"The reason why the churches are uptight," said Gross, "is that they see that federal legislation is all but inevitable and that disclosure is going to be a part of it."

"They're concerned that a backdoor regulation will force them to disclose how much money they spend in raising money," he said.

ACCEPTANCE OF the AICPA accounting principles would not, of course, mean that any religious organizations have to disclose any more than they are doing now. If disclosure were written into law, however, the financial statements would be much easier to understand by the general public.

Church, synod fight over property

Grace Lutheran Church in River Forest has taken the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod and Concordia Teachers College to court over a dispute concerning ownership of church property.

The synod is attempting to confiscate the church property because Grace Lutheran Church has left the synod.

The church has requested the Cook County Circuit Court invalidate the agreement, entered into by the church when the church purchased the property from the synod in 1929. The agreement states the synod has the option to racquire the property if the congregation breaks with the synod.

The board of directors of the synod notified the church Oct. 1 it was exercising the option.

The church occupies the corner of the River Forest Campus.

The synod's board of directors reportedly was shocked that a church should take it to court, and cited the Apostle Paul's admonition to the Church in Corinth that Christians should not take one another to court.

Cantors concert today

Five cantors from Chicago's North Side and North suburban synagogues will combine their vocal talents at the Cantors' Concert at 8 p.m. today at the Bernard Horwich Jewish Community Center, 3003 W. Touhy Ave., Chicago.

Performing will be Nissim Benyamini, B'nai Zion Congregation, Chicago; Raymond Edgar, Temple Sholom, Chicago; Milton Foreman, Mikodosh El Hagro Center, Evanston; Beatrice Horwitz, K.A.M. — Isaiah Israel, Chicago; and Shlomo Shuster, Niles Township Jewish Congregation, Skokie.

Tickets are $2.75 for the public, $1.75 for Horwich center members, and $1.50 for senior citizens and students. For more information, call 761-9100.

Parent, sex courses set

Sessions on sex and parenthood will be presented in November at the Mayer Kaplan Jewish Community Center, 5050 W. Church St., Skokie.

"Sex is Alive and Well" is the topic for a forum at 8 p.m. Tuesday. The forum is the last in a series entitled, "Looking into Retirement for Yourself and/or Your Parents."

"A Family Affair — Children and the Changing Sexual Morality" is the topic of a discussion forum to be conducted at 8 p.m. Thursday at the center.

A "Parent-to-Parent" forum will discuss thumb sucking, bed wetting and tantrums, and what these and other behaviors by children mean, starting at 9:30 a.m. Thursday.

Fees for the "Family Affair" and "Parent-to-Parent" sessions are $2 for nonmembers and $1 for students. Members are not charged.

For registration information, call the center at 675-2200.

Coptic church bazaar

The St. Mark Coptic Church, 100 S. Park St., Roselle, will host an Egyptian bazaar Nov. 19-20.

Dave Ibata

Notes on religion

The Church, the only Egyptian Orthodox congregation in the Midwest, will sponsor the bazaar in its main building from 1 to 9 p.m. Nov. 19, and from noon to 6 p.m. Nov. 20.

The bazaar will feature imported Egyptian gift items and hand-crafted articles by church members. Middle Eastern, and particularly Egyptian food, also will be available.

The cultural program will include movies of historical sites in Egypt, and slide shows at 5:30 p.m. Nov. 19, and 2 and 6 p.m. Nov. 20 on Coptic architecture, the Holy Family's visit to Egypt and historical sites in Egypt.

Proceeds from the bazaar will be sent to needy children and families for Christmas. A portion of the proceeds also will be used to improve the church's Sunday School facility.

A worship service, conducted in English, will be 10 a.m. Nov. 20.

St. James jubilee Nov. 20

The cardinal archbishop of Chicago, John Cardinal Cody, will help members of St. James Catholic Church, Arlington Heights, celebrate the church's 75th anniversary Nov. 20.

A diamond jubilee Mass at noon Nov. 20 will be followed by a reception in the parish center hosted by members of the St. James Catholic Women's Club.

Festivities will continue with a 6 p.m. dinner-dance at Allgauer's Fireside Restaurant in Northbrook.

The theme of the anniversary is "Church Works, 75 Years to the Good."

Eskimo play starts season

A play based on an Eskimo myth will lead off the Other Theatre's 1977-78 season at the Bernard Horwich Jewish Community Center, 3003 W. Touhy Ave., Chicago.

"Inuk and the Sun" will premiere at 8 p.m. Nov. 26, with 4 p.m. matinees Nov. 27, Dec. 4 and 11.

The play will include Eskimo chants, dance and giant puppets, with a musical score composed by Douglas Lieberman, director of the theater, and Thomas Johnson of the University of Alaska. The script is by Canadian poet Henry Beissel.

The center's exhibit of Eskimo perception in art will open in the center's Rosenstone Gallery Nov. 26 to coincide with the opening of the play.

Tickets are $2 for center members, $2.75 for guests and $1.50 a person for groups of 10 or more. For reservations, call 761-9100, ext. 11.

Goodbye (Gulp!) Gang! (Sob!)

Plea-bargaining obscures fact of Helms' wrong-doing

Paul Greenberg

All that campaign oratory of Jimmy Carter's about eliminating the double standard of justice for the rich and poor, the powerful and weak in this country, resounds more and more like, well, campaign oratory. Particularly after the Justice Department's treatment of Richard Helms, distinguished diplomat, former head of the Central Intelligence Agency, teller of less than the whole truth under oath, and the latest big-name beneficiary of plea bargaining.

After Helms agreed not to contest charges that he failed to testify "fully and accurately" to a Senate committee about CIA operations in Chile, he got the conventional empty rebuke from the bench "(You now stand before this court in disgrace and shame") before being let off with the conventional light fine and suspended sentence.

Usually such leniency is extended after some formal display of repentance on the defendant's part, often enough a purely formal display, but even that was omitted in the treatment of this distinguished personage. The court hearing safely concluded, he could announce to reporters: "I don't feel disgraced at all. I think if I had done anything else, I would have been disgraced."

THUS RICHARD Helms justifies his lying under oath on the basis of a prior commitment to keep CIA secrets. The justification not very neatly begs the gaping question of why he couldn't have refused to answer the Senate's questions, or told the truth in private, rather than lie. There is a whole range of distinctions ignored by Helm's righteous justification, which would seem to admit of only two choices in such a case: Keep a pledged secret, or lie under oath. And nothing in between. Whatever that says about his sense of honor, it doesn't say much for his powers of discrimination as head of this country's intelligence system.

Attorney General Griffin Bell now has given a couple of contradictory responses to the court's judgment in the Helms case. First, that the guilty judgment was won because "we were dealing from strength," and second, that "we obviously needed to bargain in this case" because "Mr. Helms could have won if it had gone to a jury." There seems to be a Griffin Bell for each occasion.

Lest anyone take the judge's words about the defendant's appearing in disgrace and shame too seriously, the attorney general added that Richard Helms "acted with honor in that he wanted to get the case finished." What other point of honor is there once plea bargaining has set in?

IF GENERAL BELL thought Richard Helms could have got off before a jury, does that mean he should have got off? If so, what was the Justice Department doing trying him in the first place? If he should have been convicted of perjury, was it not the department's duty to go to the jury? One understands that even to raise such questions is to reveal an unspeakable naivete about the way the law ought to work, as if it should have some basis in truth and justice. Plea bargaining long ago replaced such inefficient and unsophisticated bases of judgment, and not just in Richard Helms' case.

One's suspicions about the outcome of the Helms case are immediately confirmed by the intelligence that Anthony Lewis of the New York Times approves. Lewis, whether discussing the battle between John Marshall and Thomas Jefferson over executive privilege, or the utter depravity of American policy in Cambodia and just about everywhere else, displays an unerring instinct for the sophistical. And he does not disappoint in the case of Richard Helms, citing the plea-bargaining outcome as "one more stage in the process that has been taking place in this country — the establishment of a rule of law for high officials."

George Orwell, when confronted by a similar piece of effrontery, said something to the effect that it takes an intellectual to believe that; no one with common sense could swallow it. Is such light treatment really going to discourage officials from lying under oath? Or only make them lie more carefully?

NOR IS THE Nixonesque argument from national security above Anthony Lewis. If the case had gone to a jury, he writes, "government lawyers might have been faced with a court order to produce something whose disclosure would arouse legitimate concern — and they might then have to dismiss the case." Whereupon, Lewis grants that "some loose comment (his own, perchance?) on the plea bargaining . . . has seen it as a balance between the interests of secrecy and law — as if some future Richard Helms could be justified in violating the law for reasons of state." Which is precisely the conclusion that Lewis invites and that many will draw from this case, notably Richard Helms himself: "I don't feel disgraced at all. I think if I had done anything else, I would have been disgraced."

The plea-bargained Helms case does not illustrate any new ascendancy of law or conscience under this Administration but the same old permissiveness continued. The only change is that this Administration and its yea-sayers present that permissiveness as some kind of great leap forward in moral standards. That is not a change for the better.

Plan for Harper's future

The hardest part of the job facing the Harper College Board of Trustees now begins.

The board Thursday accepted the resignation of College Pres. Robert E. Lahti following weeks of negotiation on a settlement of his contract and months of controversy. Now the board must provide the firm leadership the college needs to come through the transition with a positive direction for the future.

The board has appointed an interim president and plans to begin a search for a new chief executive which should result in an appointment by next July.

In undertaking that search, the board must establish a committee faculty, students and citizens to aid in the process. The search must be conducted as openly as possible with community involvement.

There are other pressing issues facing the Harper board in addition to the choice of a new president. A review of several issues discussed at Thursday's meeting following acceptance of Lahti's resignation indicates that the college must deal with planning, finances and building program in the immediate future.

Next week, the college administration will receive proposals from consulting firms which want to update the college's master plan. Next month, the board will be called on to award that job. The decision will be important because the new master plan will provide a framework for Harper's future.

In addition, the board must oversee plans for the new buildings for which the college has received state approval. By 1979, the school will have a new physical education facility, now under construction, and two new classroom buildings. Plans must be made for staff and programs for the new facilities.

On Thursday, in addition to accepting Lahti's resignation the board accepted the resignation of Vice Pres. William Mann, the school's business manager. In the coming months, even while they look for a new president, the board must ensure that the college's financial affairs are kept in order and must also conduct a search for Mann's replacement.

These tasks will be conducted under continuing public scrutiny. The Harper College board must demonstrate its ability to set priorities and to provide positive direction in the months to come.

Harper's future depends on the job they do in the coming months.

Justice served in Helms conviction

Former CIA Director Richard Helms ought to know he was wrong.

Helms and those who sympathize with him ought to know that no person is above the law and that by placing himself in that position he guaranteed that he eventually would pay the price. And so he did last week — $2,000 and a two year suspended sentence for lying under oath to Congress.

At the crux of the case is the fact that Helms lied to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. On two occasions Helms said he knew nothing of covert CIA activities in Chile. In fact he knew much about the work of the CIA in preventing the late President Salvador Allende from winning election as well as other covert activities during the Nixon years.

Helms found himself caught between the code of his intelligence community and the laws that govern all of us. He made the wrong decision and for that he was convicted last week.

In handing down the sentence after Helms pleaded no contest to the charge, Judge Barrington Parker gave the former CIA chief a verbal tongue-lashing.

Parker said: "If public officials embark deliberately on a course to disobey and ignore the laws of our land because of some ill-conceived notion and belief . . . the future of our country is in jeopardy. Public officials at every level, whatever their position, like any other person, must respect and honor the Constitution and the laws of the United States."

In no uncertain terms Parker announced that no man is above the law. Helms is only the latest example of government officials who felt they were. And for that he stands with them in disgrace, his career spoiled by a misguided sense of loyalty.

Crossings site wrong for youth center

Residents of The Crossings and Heritage Place subdivisions in Buffalo Grove are angry about a proposal to locate a youth center in an old farm house near their homes.

It seems village officials in their haste to give the kids a place of their own have completely disregarded the residents of the area.

While it's highly unlikely any youth center site will please everyone, these residents have legitimate concerns that need to be considered.

The heart of a residential area southwest of Arlington Heights Road and Ill. Rt. 83 is not the place to locate a youth center. It is understandable that residents would be concerned about traffic, noise and vandalism problems stemming from the youth center. The location is accessible only by driving narrow, winding streets of the subdivisions.

Buffalo Grove officials need to reexamine The Crossings location for a youth center in light of the residents, complaints.

Despite the fact that the farmhouse is readily available, that doesn't mean that it is the best place for the youth center. Some other location ought to be found.

On Nov. 2, I attended the public hearing of the Elk Grove Plan Commission which dealt with the proposed ambulatory surgical center. On Nov. 3, I read The Daily Herald's article reviewing the meeting and felt that my impression of the hearing differed with that of your reporter.

It was stated in the article that few persons present addressed the commission about abortions. In fact, several statements and questions were voiced which showed the concern of the community residents attending the meeting. In fairness to your reporter, the majority of the questions and statements were made when your reporter was out of the room, apparently calling in his story.

It was my conclusion that most of the persons at the hearing felt that an ambulatory surgical center which would peform abortions is unwanted and unneeded by the residents of Elk Grove and would be detrimental to our community.

It is my understanding that the proposed ambulatory surgical abortion clinic is being sponsored by an out of state resident. The building which would house the facility is owned by Mr George Long who does not reside in the community. I believe that the majority of persons who would use the clinic would also reside outside the village. It is the residents of Elk Grove, however, who would be forced to live with the center and its consequences.

Karen Vance
Elk Grove Village

YOUR REPORT ON Nov. 3 of the public hearing on the proposed amendment to the zoning ordinance for the property in Elk Grove's Longfellow Plaza did not reflect the views of the concerned citizens present. The article stated that "few of the 30 persons present had anything to say." However, many people did indeed voice their concern over the proposed surgical treatment center that would routinely perform abortions. The following comments were omitted from your front-page article on the subject:

- Elk Grove has no need of an additional surgical facility with Alexian Brothers Medical Center and Northwest Community Hospital in the immediate area.
- As taxpayers we the residents should have a voice in the type of buildings we allow in our village; an outsider bringing in an organization from another state should not be allowed to force a service on our community that we neither need nor want.
- If surgery is going to be performed in a building, an ambulance service should be located much closer to the facility than the 15-minute limit suggested.
- Experience in the field of mental health proves that Elk Grove would certainly have to provide more mental health care to heal the minds of the young girls and women using an abortion clinic, should it be allowed.

As concerned parents, we do not want our children growing up in a community that provides a faciliy to destroy unwanted babies. If unwanted pregnancies are a problem, the solution can come from a revitalized morality which would eliminate the problem altogether.

'Tax limit would end tax madness'

Perhaps the time has come for our federal, state and local governments to be made aware they have a very precious resource, a limited resource that could be running dry — The American Taxpayer.

Ever since that green stuff was first collected and pumped into the hands of our various governments, they were led to believe this resource was unlimited. Given time, whole bureaucracies with innumerable, wasteful social programs, indeed, whole economies grew up around this vital resource. Today, their size and consumption of our tax dollars has grown at such an alarming rate that it staggers the imagination.

Today, taxpayers are forced to pay not only federal, state and local taxes, but a ludicrous variety of others as well. Consider if you will, our rising social security tax, sales tax, gas tax, gift tax, capital gains tax, and inheritance tax to name but a few.

Something is very wrong when senior citizens living on a fixed retirement income have to sell the very house they've lived in for 30 years and paid for, because they cannot afford to pay their skyrocketing property taxes.

Let's look very closely at what the taxpayer is getting for all his tax money. He gets senators and congressmen who pay more attention to the powerful special interest groups, than to the people who pay their salaries. He gets overcrowded schools that more and more are turning out near illiterates who can hardly add 2 plus 2. He gets a welfare system that's a joke and easily ripped-off by cheaters. He gets streets that are unsafe to walk down. Most of all, he gets bureaucracies that are drowning in their own paperwork and red tape. It might well seem that what taxpayers are getting for all this tax money is "the shaft."

Slowly, but surely, all of this "taxing madness" is drying-up this very precious resource. I feel the time is right to support legislation to constitutionally limit taxation in this country, before it's too late.

"What do you have for a businessman who has spent his entire day trying to figure out Jimmy Carter and failed?"

No special treatment for Lance until all investigations are over

Watch on Washington

The Bert Lance investigation is not over, and President Carter would be well advised to read the signs that preclude any special treatment for his Georgia banker friend.

There are at least a half dozen investigations in progress in the U.S. Justice Dept. and other federal agencies that in one way or another deal with the recently resigned director of the Office of Management and Budget.

At any moment any one of those investigations could erupt in either civil or criminal litigation that could bring further trouble for Lance and further embarrassment for President Carter if he persists in demonstrating his continued approval of Lance.

WHILE PRESIDENT Carter would like to regard the Lance affair as over, there have been a number of gentle and not so gentle warnings that Lance will be held to the promises of cooperation and disclosure to investigators that he pledged in the televised hearings. The Senate's Government Affairs Committee chairman, Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., and Senator Charles Percy, R-Ill., — both badly burned on the gentle Lance confirmation — now are determined not to make the same mistake again.

It is significant that Ribicoff and Percy approved a letter written to Lance's attorney by Staff Director Richard Wegman reminding him that Lance has not yet produced certain information and recrods for the committee.

Wegman's letter to Robert J. Altman, Lance's lawyer, in the last week of October was an official prod indicating public dissatisfaction with the cooperation on the pending inquiries dealing with Lance's authority to sign the name of his wife or others at Calhoun First National Bank during a crucial overdraft period.

Lance had promised these and other key documents at the Senate hearing in mid-September, but failed to produce the records in six weeks.

MISLED BY Lance's vague answers in his confirmation hearing and in another hearing in July, Chairman Ribicoff used the Wegman letter to serve notice that the Government Affairs Committee wants all of the documents to support Lance's general story and contention that his actions were not criminal violations of banking laws, election laws, or the rules and regulations of the Securities and Exchange Commission or the Office of Comptroller of Currency.

Equally firm commitments to a follow-through on the Lance affair have come from Senator William Proxmire D-Wis., chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, and from Representative Fernand J. St. Germain, D-R.I., chairman of a House banking subcommittee that has zeroed in on the possibility of perjury by Robert Bloom, deputy comptroller of the currency, and Donald Tarleton, regional director of the comptroller's office in Atlanta.

Low-key, nonpartisan comment from committee chairmen St. Germain, Ribicoff and Proxmire serves to remind government investigators that they may be held accountable for the thoroughness of the investigations and the soundness of their decisions.

It also should be a reminder to President Carter and U.S. Atty. Gen. Griffin Bell, both long-time friends of Lance, that they should permit no actions that might be interpreted as interference or soft-pedalling of the Lance investigation.

They burp, slurp, whine, dine—and make me cry

Dorothy Meyer

A couple of co-workers who are younger than me (but only by a generation or so) were talking this week about Christmas shopping for their children — and now I have another reason to be glad that I'm middle-aged-plus.

My being older than my co-workers just naturally means that my children are older than their children. That, most happily, means I don't have to wonder about which doll Santa Claus is going to bring for my daughter.

If I had to decide between a doll that belches or one that grabs onto anything you put in her fist and then hangs on until the Second Coming, or one with a built-in tape deck, or one that wets all over the place, I'd be inclined to trade my child in for a new car.

TODAY'S DOLLS DO a lot of things — besides wet and burp and clutch and talk too much — and I wonder if there's no end to the functions that they are programmed to perform?

Whatever happened to the doll that didn't do anything but be there when you needed her? Or, if you were real lucky, and got one that opened and closed her eyes, opened and closed her eyes but that was all? And didn't say anything but "Maaaaamaaaaa" when you bent her in the middle?

When I was a kid you could trust the doll you hugged, but the way dolls are built now, I wouldn't dare touch one for fear she'd wet on me, burp on me, suddenly sprout adult parts, clutch me in a death grip or talk me into the ground.

Of course, I didn't discover just this week that dollies are different than they used to be — after all, I've been watching television for quite some time.

AND ANYBODY who watches even a teensy weensy bit of television any time after the end of the World Series has seen an icky sticky lot of commercials for Christmas toys, especially dolls. Especially this year.

But my goodness, this year is worse than last year and I thought last year was worse than all the years before. (For parents who advocate teaching children everything about everything when the kids are too young to even give a hoot, substitute "more progressive" for "worse.")

It seems that dolls are doing everything but propagate and I sense that that's the next step, now that we're in the second or third year of fully-equipped little boy dolls. And how come little boy dolls are prominently displayed au naturel, but little girl dolls are still in tastefully decorated boxes or displayed with all their expensive clothes on?

AS I SAY, I'm glad I don't have to go doll-shopping any more. The way my kids used to revamp their toys, we'd have a Gabbie Gertie who burped into her tape deck and a Dolly Grippo who talked incessantly during a half-Nelson and everything would be wet all the time.

Besides, I'm hopelessly old and old-fashioned so what do I know about kids and dolls any more?

Except maybe, "Long live Raggedy Ann."

Idaho editor jail term postponed

MOSCOW, Idaho (UPI) — Newspaper editor Jay Shelledy reported to the Latah County Jail Friday to begin serving 30 days for refusing to disclose a news source, but a judge postponed the sentence.

Judge Roy Mosman said he was considering an alternate punishment which would prohibit Shelledy's newspaper, the Lewiston Tribune, from defending itself in a libel case.

The judge said it would be pointless for Shelledy to go to jail before a ruling is handed down on a new motion in the case.

THE EDITOR nevertheless appeared at the jail shortly after noon because he said he had a "gentlemen's agreement" with the judge to do so. He went directly to Sheriff Mike Goetz, who said he could not accept him as a prison without a court-signed detention order.

Shelledy replied, "I won't argue with that," then shook hands with Goetz and left.

"I wanted to begin serving my sentence and get it over with before the holidays," he said.

Shelledy was found in contempt of court by Mosman for refusing to name an unidentified "police expert" quoted in a Tribune story that became the subject of a libel suit. The Idaho Supreme Court upheld Mosman's ruling and the U.S. Supreme Court last week refused to hear the case, clearing the way for Shelledy's jailing.

But Mosman was asked Thursday night by the attorney for the man suing the Tribune not to jail Shelledy, and instead strike Shelledy's and the Tribune's defense in the $60,000 libel case over a story written by Shelledy.

MOSMAN SAID it would be a more severe penalty to strike the Tribune's defense than it would be to sentence Shelledy to jail.

Michael Caldero, a former undercover agent for the state Bureau of Narcotics and Organized Crime, contends he was libeled in a story about his actions during an arrest in Coeur d'Alene in 1972.

Caldero shot Dale Johnson three times, contending Johnson tried to run him down with his car. Johnson claimed Caldero did not identify himself as a police officier.

AP newsman released after 18-hour ordeal

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (UPI) — Associated Press newsman Oscar Serrat was released unharmed Friday to end an 18-hour ordeal in which he was kidnapped, blindfolded and questioned by men claiming to be police.

Serrat, 45, an Argentine citizen, was seized by two men in civilian clothes shortly after leaving his home in a residential neighborhood on the way to work Thursday morning, an AP spokesman said.

Taken to what he believed to be a small basement room of a home after about an hour's drive, Serrat spent most of the time alone and was blindfolded and handcuffed throughout his captivity.

HE WAS RELEASED about 1 a.m. Friday near his home after being questioned about leftist guerrillas, the Associated Press operations and his own background, the AP said.

Police said they had no idea who seized Serrat.

In New York, Keith Fuller, president and general manager of the AP, said the abduction of Serrat was perplexing since "as far as I know, he had not been involved in any sensitive stories or assignments, nor had he been a target for criticism."

In Washington, U.S. State Dept. spokesman Ken Brown said the U.S. Embassy in Buenos Aires "worked very closely with the AP bureau in investigating the circumstances of the disappeaance of that journalist, Mr. Serrat.

"We were quite concerned about the report and once we learned about it we immediately started looking into it."

SERRAT'S disappearance caused widespread concern because hundreds or possibly thousands of persons, including numerous journalists, have disappeared as a result of Argentina's political strife. Some of the missing journalists turned up in police custody, others have been found dead and some are still missing.

The Associated Press had made an intense effort to determine Serrat's whereabouts but neither federal police headquarters nor local precinct stations had any information on who had seized him.

Serrat was seized a few hours before the U.S. Ambassador to Argentina, former Gov. Raul Castro of Arizona, arrived in Buenos Aires to take up his post. The Buenos Aires Herald said in an editorial Friday it was conceivable the kidnapping was timed to coincide with Castro's arrival in an attempt to embarrass the government of President Jorge Videla.

The government is already under criticism internationally for alleged human rights violations.

Natural beauty of redwood lumber can add class to dull-looking walls

Redwood lumber applied in diagonal and other attention-getting patterns can accent walls anywhere in your home, according to the California Redwood Assn.

Paneling with individual kiln-dried Clear All Heart and Clear grade redwood boards ensures dimensional stability with quality, design and installation advantages over other materials. Lightweight and free of pitch for easy lifting, sawing and nailing, redwood boards in varied texturs, patterns and dimensions can be mixed and matched so each wall is unique.

For paneling to accent a vaulted ceiling or "lower" the ceiling for intimacy, redwood lumber can be applied in shallow to steep diagonal patterns, herringbone, zig-zag and other mosaic designs.

ACCENT WALLS anywhere? Redwood lumber 1-inch thick (nominal dimension) has a Class II flamespread rating under the Uniform Building Code so it can be used in kitchens, bathrooms, hallways and even around and above fireplaces. Over a bed, in your front hall or room addition, redwood lumber accents add deep, rich wood textures that invite creativity with furniture, fabrics, stained glass and macrame wall hangings.

Clear grade redwood lumber can be arranged to exaggerate the creamy ''flare'' effects of its sapwood streaks. Clear All Heart grade redwood's rich, uniform heartwood tones can be used for more formal or traditional decor.

Boards with vertical or flat woodgrains, and a smooth or rough texture, can be used alone or mixed. For more variety, channel rustic and shiplap paneling patterns have strong V-grooves or accent lines, while square edge tongue and groove patterns have none. Boards varying in width and thickness can also be mixed.

Redwood boards usually can be glued and nailed directly to wall studs or plasterboard, although uneven or damaged walls may require furring strips — a framework of vertical 1-by-4s or 1-by-3s nailed about 16 inches apart on wall studs and around doors and windows, with shims fitted over severe gaps or cracks.

DIAGONAL APPLICATIONS take about 15 per cent more lumber than horizontal or vertical, but you can save a lot by butt-joining random-length boards over studs or furring strips in the middle of your wall, cutting off board ends straight or at an angle. Raw paneling edges and corners can be finished with redwood molding or trim.

For a fireplace or wall accent, redwood lumber can be installed in herringbone patterns, pointing up or down, from sharp and steep to shallow and subtle. Lumber is butt-joined over a vertical stud or furring strip, with board ends miter cut.

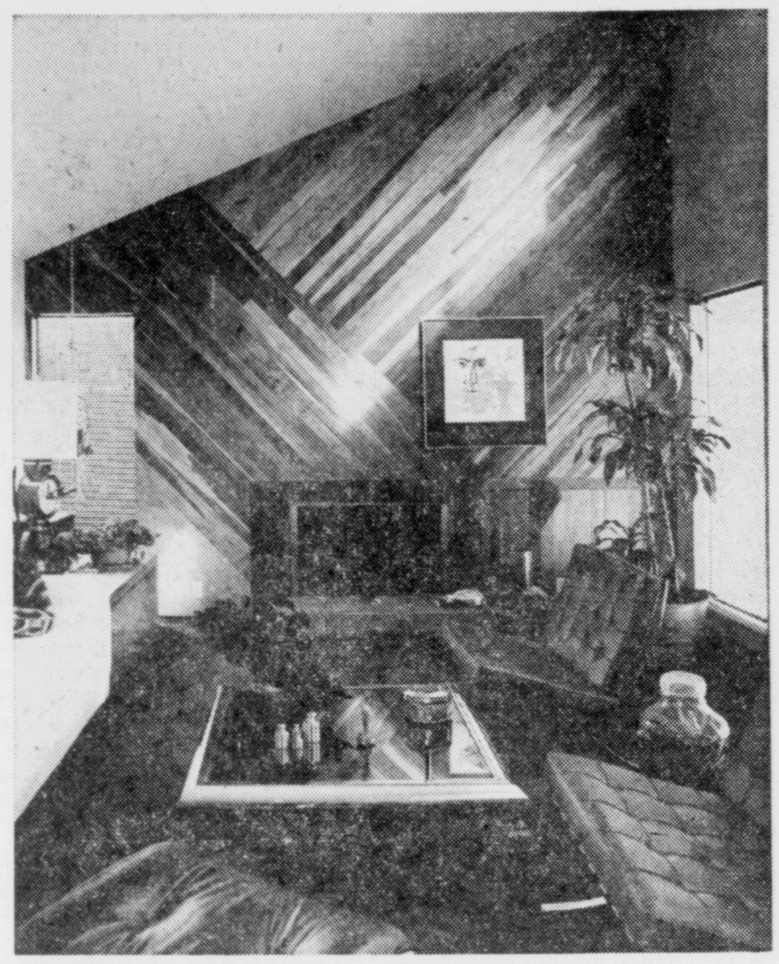
For a zig-zag effect, diagonal paneling sections can be perpendicular, with board ends of one section butt-joined against the leading tongue or groove edge of another. If you use furring strips, nail some extra blocking diagonally along the seam where paneling sections will join.

Redwood lumber paneled ceilings and walls away from dirt, grease and people can be left unfinished, although some surfaces that receive occasional light cleaning should be finished with clear tinted wax stains, or a clear sealer for top performance.

FOR KITCHEN-BAHTROOM walls in direct contact with moisture and high humidity, four to five coats of clear flat or satin-textured polyurethane or alkyd resin varnish are recommended. Away from direct water-splash or grease, clear polyurethane or alkyd resin sealers will stand up to average hard living.

For maximum bathroom-kitchen performance, staple a 6 mil. polyethylene film vapor barrier over studs or furring strips before paneling is applied. Also recommended are non-corrosive, top quality hot-dipped galvanized stainless steel or aluminum nails and fastenings that last longer than any others.

For help with planning a redwood accent wall, ordering lumber or installing and finishing paneling, see a local redwood lumber dealer. The step-by-step brochure, "Panel A Room With Redwood Lumber," and a color design idea booklet, "Redwood Interiors," are available for 50 cents from the California Redwood Asss., Dept. DIAG, 617 Montgomery St., San Francisco, Calif., 94111.



ZIG-ZAG sapwood streaks of Clear grade redwood lumber paneling create a dramatic contemporary design. A home decorator can mix different grains, dimensions and patterns of Clear and Clear All Heart grade redwood, to suit the decor of any room.

Save the tree or chop it down?

George Creed

It's your landscape

When a tree reaches a ripe old age and is still in good condition it is as remarkable as when the same thing occurs to a human being.

From the time a tree emerges from its seed it is assaulted by insects, plagued by disease and, in urban environments, smothered by polluted air. And, in many cases, man does little to improve the welfare of trees: he breaks their branches, carves his initials in their bark and wounds them with bulldozers, lawn mowers and other machines.

But for every tree able to withstand the ravages of time there are many that struggle to exist in spite of rotting trunks, dying branches and general neglect. For the homeowner who has a tree he is fond of that hangs on from year to year in some miraculous manner, it is often difficult to decide whether to try to save it or have it removed.

EXTENSIVE SURGERY is expensive and often unwarranted when the tree involved is not of a particularly desirable species such as silver maple, poplar, willow — or when it is a tree doomed to almost certain death by a peculiar susceptibility to insects and disease.

American elms, Lombardy and Bolleana poplars and European birch are a few of the trees in the latter class. Perhaps not all of our beautiful elms will be killed by the Dutch elm disease, but certainly the odds are against them since no effective cure has been found.

Nor has there been discovered a cure for the canker and dieback that kills the Lombardy and Bolleana poplars. The graceful European birch is very susceptible to infestations of the bronze birch borer, which can kill one of these trees in one season. Large sums of money spent on trees of this kind are wasted.

Surgery for an oak tree such as that shown in sketch No. 1 might be warranted provided the owner had a special attachment for it and was willing to spend a considerable amount of money to have its extensive cavity cleaned and filled and its dead wood removed. Even so, he should carefully weigh the option of preserving his ancient tree against the advantages of planting a new one. He might find it cheaper to plant a large healthy tree for less money than it would to repair the old one.

As far as the poplar in sketch No. 2 is concerned — any money spent on it would be sheer waste.

How effective is the Praying Mantis in controlling insects?

Very effective. Unfortunately, they are non-selective and eat the good insects along with the bad.

Are crab apple trees affected by the same diseases that regular apple trees are?

Yes.

Bar Harbour sold out

Condel Realty Co. has reported 300 sales of new condominium apartments totaling $15 million for the past 12 months.

Three developments, for which Condel is exclusive sales agent, are sold out. One is in Chicago, one in Oak Brook, and a third in Schaumburg — the Bar Harbour Community at Windmill Lake, a planned unit development consisting of two mid-rise buidings comprising 150 condominium units, a clubhouse, swimming pool and tennis courts.

Interlaken adds more units

Construction is under way on more vacation townhomes at Interlaken an 80-acre community near Lake Geneva, Wis.

The new townhome villas will be priced from $43,900. All of the 70 units already built by the Anvan Companies at Interlaken have been sold.

Each of the new villas will be furnished with kitchen ranges, refrigerators, dishwashers and cookware with a dinner service for eight and a dinette set in the dining area.

Master bedrooms will feature a king-size bed, and living room-family room areas will offer hideaway and sofa beds to accommodate six persons.

Each Villa will have a ceramic tiled bath and private patio or balcony.

Recreational facilities also are available on the $40 million property, including tennis courts, marinas, swimming pool, ski hills and ice skatting, ice fishing and tobogganing in the winter.

Interlaken is located on Wis. Rte. 50 three miles west of downtown Lake Geneva.

Mini-skirted 'A' frame has plenty of room

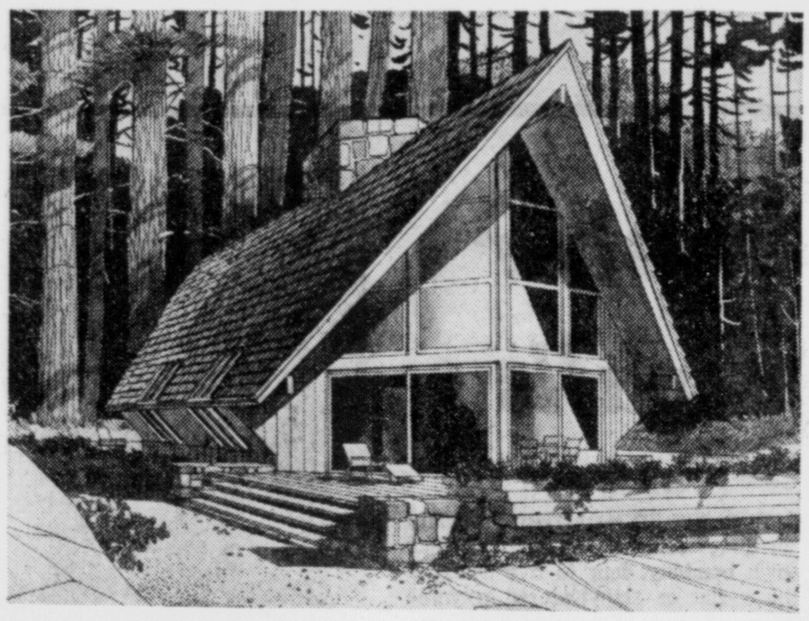
One might call this unusual vacation home a mini-skirted "A" frame since its eave lines are much higher than in most homes of this type.

In this design, the plate height starts at seven feet instead of on the floor. The purpose is to gain maximum interior room on both floors with minimum roof surface, and ridge height.

Another way of putting it is that with the same roof a standard "A" frame house would only have about 50 per cent of the living space.

Jean-Paul Saint-Michel

Home of your own



A UNIQUE arrangement was used here to lower the eave somewhat and yet tie it into the main structure.

Butterfly type window units lap over and under the extended eave without interrupting the continuity. They not only catch the high sky sun but afford both an upward and downward view besides offering special interest inside and out.

The huge glass front area of almost 200 square feet flaunts basic, conservative design ideas as well as outdoors-to-inside and indoors-to-out without obstruction. Moments of privacy can be provided by draw drapes or bamboo roll screens over the large sliding glass doors.

After mounting the stone supported deck and stepping under the wide slung sunshade roof, one enters a basically wide open 19-foot-by-24-foot room that makes up the lounge, eating area and kitchen. A centrally located stone chimney shaft 20 feet high forms the space separation without appearing to do so. A beam supported balcony crosses the rear of the room, adding special interest to the vaulted ceiling area.

THE KITCHEN is an efficient "U" shape, compact and well appointed. One counter doubles as a service bar and beverage bar.

A service door, which connects to the front deck, opens into a laundry, mud room, shower and bath beyond; the basement stair is close by.

Two bedrooms with exceptional closet space are located to the rear, with access to the rear deck.

The second-floor stair is placed for privacy and leads to a balcony at front, overlooking the living room. A third bedroom blessed with a large glass area is at the back.

Exterior materials used are stained wood roof shingles and stained vertical boards on short side walls. Stone walls support the wood deck.

HOFFMAN HOMES
ONE OF THE HOFFMAN GROUP, INC.

Lawrence E. Lamb

The doctor says

Family doctor can be communication link

About two months ago I realized that I had breast cancer. At that time, I did not have a family doctor. A friend who is a nurse referred me to the best surgeon in town. I had a radical mastectomy, but when I came to my right upper leg was numb in the flesh, like a local anesthetic would be, yet very painful as though someone was cutting gashes with a razor blade.

My surgeon was out of town and another surgeon took care of me. He wouldn't tell me anything. When I was strong enough to walk I had a terrible muscle cramp. It went away in about four days, but I didn't know it would. He could have saved me some mental anguish if he would have just told me what to expect.

A third surgeon came in to see me and he looked at the place but wouldn't tell me anything to relieve my mind from the torment of things going haywire.

There I was "stranded" in a hospital, with the strong feeling that I badly needed a doctor but I couldn't get out to go find one. I needed help, yet there was a doctor coming to see me every day, checking on the surgery.

I keep thinking that if I had had a family doctor perhaps he would have taken care of the side effects these doctors refused to treat. I really don't understand what the score is. The public needs to be educated on simple basic steps they should take when they need medical aid. Do you have any comments?

You are telling me a familiar story. You and your doctors had a communications problem. This happens to patients seeing the best doctors in the world. Your doctors didn't know you as a person before your surgery, and you didn't know them. You were not professionally neglected, but you did have anxiety because you didn't understand your problem.

Some doctors are reluctant to talk to patients because it takes time which some of them really do not have.

Every ache and pain cannot be diagnosed when it first occurs. With time, the true nature of the difficulty may become apparent. Your doctors may have been concerned that you may have been developing a clot in the leg, but the signs were not sufficient to make such a diagnosis. What should the doctor do? If he discusses all the possibilities, he may alarm the patient needlessly. If he waits a few days, and if need be, takes tests, he may then be able to say exactly and correctly what the real problem is.

Today many doctors, particularly surgeons, practice defensive medicine. Some people look for an excuse to "sue the damned doctor. He's got plenty." Anything the doctor says when he takes the patient into his confidence may be held against him, and no one is going to be there to advise him of his rights before he speaks. That is a social problem.

What should patients do? The most important thing is to have a family doctor who does know you before you have an emergency. He can refer you to a surgeon if you need one, and can help bridge the gap. That will not solve every problem, but it will be a major step in the right direction.

Wall coverings can spice up a room

Carolyn Murray

Your home

From the moment one weary nomad created a temporary shelter out of hides and lengths of woven fabric, wallcoverings of one kind or another have had a place in our lives.

We know that Berber rugs were for sitting on as well as for hanging between spaces. Sort of portable walls. Or maybe we'd call them "knockdown."

But once man and woman became adjusted to vertical decoration, more permanent wallcoverings were inevitable. It was a keen business type who saw the potential and began switching from woven wallcoverings (such as tapestries) to printed paper.

SINCE WE credit just about everything to the industrial revolution, it's probably safe to assume that hand-painted murals were also replaced by printed scenic wallcoverings the moment the machinery was available.

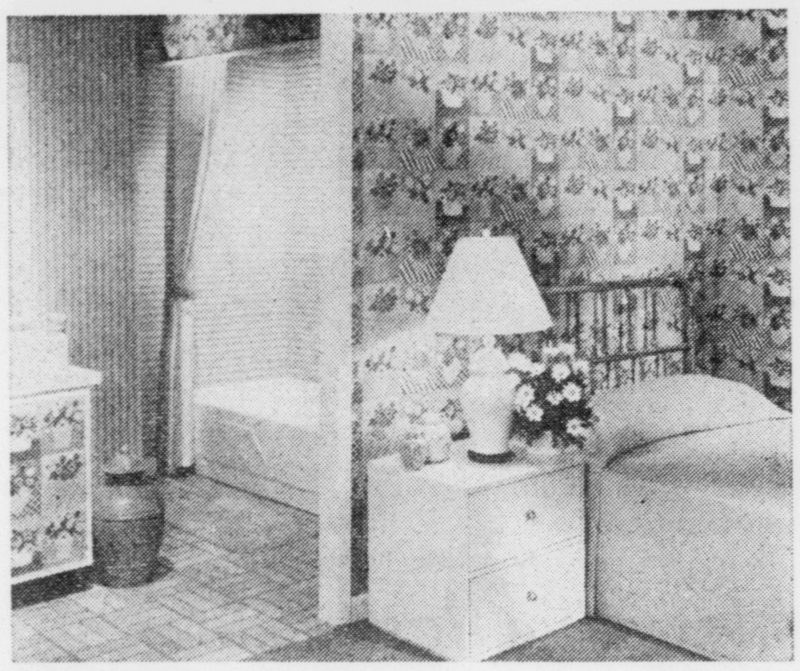
And from that day to this, the quickest, most economical way to change face around the house is "wallcovering." Naturally, much of what is in the market is not paper. Vinyls are important, as are grassy textures and paper-backed fabrics.

In the setting shown today, the manufacturers of United-DeSoto covers were trying to show how contemporary colorings and pattern coordination could upgrade two rooms at one shopping.

In the suggested bath-dressing area, a striped covering, called "Good Morning," has been used horizontally (over the bathtub) and vertically. Above the tub area a companion floral, called "Morning Glory," has been used to cover a valance.

THAT SAME frisky floral, with its Matisse-like bouquets, sparks a bedroom for two teen-agers. And the basic scheme of orange and yellow, with other hot accents, is fulfilled in ginger-jar lamps and painted chests.

Mock tile flooring in the dressing area meets low-pile carpeting in the bedroom and the white/green switch is as sprightly as the summer garden. As the French say, this duo has savoir-faire and flair.



HERE'S A TEAM of eye-opening wallcoverings by United-DeSoto that make an easy transition from bath to bedroom.

The companion wallcoverings are part of a Kitchen & Bath Collection by United-DeSoto of Chicago. Most paint and wallcovering dealerships feature their lines.

Tips on vegetables from the man

Potting shed

Ever consider storing seeds over the winter in powdered milk? How about freezing peas in a pillowcase?

Try tatooing names on pumpkins while they are growing to delight the children! Think of using an ice-cream scoop, instead of a trowel, for sizing uniform planting holes!

Did you know that clipping off the upper half of cabbage leaves with scissors when transplanting avoids wilting and setback? It's the little things that help make a gardener a super green thumb!

And when we can get our hands on a gardening book loaded with tips like the above — the expertise of 10,000 people instead of one lonely garden writer — we've got a harvest of ideas that would make the Green Giant jealous.

THAT'S WHAT we have with the publication of "A to Z Hints for the Vegetable Grower," the Men's Garden Club of America's first book.

Members from 250 garden club chapters across the land contributed, and Bob Sanders, a Des Moines Iowa member/garden writer, compiled the information, with Iowan Bob Fischer doing the illustrations.

Trying to organize a mountain of ideas from as many sources as these must be almost as bad as trying to decide which bills to pay at the end of the month. But Bob Sanders displays skillful editing. Known to his listening audiences as "Mr. Green Tongue," his style is short, sweet and full of meat. Meeting the dimpled-cheeked Sanders is, in itself, a romp into his mirthful personality.

Here's more: using mums as natural moisture meters, ideas for drainage testing, earthworm testing, the value of yellow plastic dishpans, dried yeast, bare feet in the garden, ice cubes, matchbooks, peanut-oil soaked rags. No, I'm not going to detail the tips — you have to read the book!

THE BOOK IS organized alphabetically, so if you can spell, you can follow the book. The value of "A to Z Hints" is in offering special tips for various veggies, giving unique information and making the material readable and accessible. There's a companion planting guide, a special section of harvesting tips and storage saavy and lots of references to other texts if the reader wants more details.

Sanders touches on the mistakes often made by beginners, what NOT to do (zilched ideas, he calls them), cut-and-come-again ideas, zany tricks.

And I don't know what these men do when they go home at night to their wives, but they sure find time for some creative gardening ideas like collecting exotic animal manure when the circus is in town (elephant, lion is supposed to be super!).

BUT NEVER forget — these men need us gals — unless Joe Namath is a club member. One of the tips in their book is a cantaloupe sling — using nylon hose to support trellised muskmelons, gourds, and watermelons.

After I consumed this book, I said to myself smugly: "Yes, but now that the men have grown all these veggies, they'll have to come crawling to us gals for cooking recipes!"

Not so! The men also have another book — "Jams, Jellies and Desserts from Vegetables" (with the emphasis on desserts). It can be purchased for $4.20 (same price, including postage, as the "A to Z" book) by writing Men's Garden Club of America Headquarters, 5560 Merle Hay Rd., Des Moines, Iowa 50323, for either selection, also request a free list of all the pamphlets they have.

It's times like this I wish my mother had named me Harry B. Good.

Spore dust available to kill insect grubs

Dear Roberta: We're having a hard time in our neighborhood with Japanese beetle grubs. One of our neighbors applied diazinon, and another used trichlorfon on his turf. Neither had any luck in getting rid of the pests, and now we don't know what to do. — J. F. Coyne

It's no comfort, I know, but many persons are reporting problems from heavy infestations of these beetle grubs this fall. It could well be that some grubs are resistant to those once-effective chemicals.

Any effective pesticide works better if everyone in the area cooperates in using it, but this time you may have an advantage over the situation. The U.S. Dept. of Agriculture has developed a natural protection against unwelcome larvae in a milky disease spore dust. The dust is commercially available and found in many garden supply stores. Or call your county agricultural agent to find out where you can obtain the powder.

The application rate varies according to how it is used. Milky disease is fatal only to certain insect grubs, but an insecticide already applied to the ground would inhibit the powder's effectiveness. Hurry to acquire the spore dust, as grubs burrow further into the soil as weather grows colder.

Dear Roberta: Empty cardboard boxes from liquor stores, with their dividers left in place, are fine storage container for kids' toys. We turned two on their sides for our boys to use as parking garages for their trucks and cars.— Eleanor Shane.

Dear Roberta: I learned this trick from my wife when she accompanied me on out-of-town business trips. A travel iron and a press cloth are left permanently in my suitcase. With these, unwanted creases in suits and shirts can be pressed out on bath towels spread over a heat-resistant hotel dressing table or bureau top. Sure beats looking for a fast pressing job in an unfamiliar city. — John Kirchner.

Weddings

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Solley

Mary-Sue Pastorello – Richard Solley

Two area families were united at the Oct. 8 wedding of Mary-Sue Pastorello, Arlington Heights, and Richard Solley, Hoffman Estates. They were married in a 5 p.m. double ring ceremony at St. John's Greek Orthodox Church, Des Plaines. A reception for 330 guests followed at the Chateau Ritz, Niles.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Pastorello, Arlington Heights, and the groom is the son of Mrs. Edna Solley, Arlington Heights, and Stephen Solley, Barrington.

Mary-Sue chose her sister, Joanne, as maid of honor. Bridesmaids were the groom's sister, Mirian Carlson, Gresham, Ore.; the bride's cousin, Penny Gatsos, Elmhurst; Chris Wendall, Prospect, Heights: Laurie Jacobsen, Palatine; and Carman Meents, Kankakee. Laural Kontonickas, 5, Mary-Sue's cousin from Ohio and Stephanie Bolger, 5, Arlington Heights, were flower girls.

THOMAS Stephanson, Arlington Heights, was best man and ushers were Robert Becker, Elgin, Robert Fisher, Palatine; Thomas Schrieber, Mount Prospect; the bride's cousin, John Gatsos, Des Plaines; and the bride's brother, Louis. Jonathan Elliott, 6, Park Ridge, was ring bearer.

After a week's honeymoon in Acapulco, the couple are making their home in Hoffman Estates. Mary-Sue, a 1973 graduate of Hersey High School, attended Eastern Illinois University and is now office manager for Burtons Shoes, Northbrook. Her husband, a 1975 graduate of the University of Denver, works for Jakes, Inc., Des Plaines.

C. Foster – M. Magnuson

A couple who met while students at Northwestern University were married Oct. 22 in Kenilworth Union Church, Kenilworth. The bride is the former Constance Foster, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Foster, Mount Prospect, and the groom, Michael Magnuson, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Swan Magnuson, Des Plaines.

For the 6 p.m. wedding Constance wore an ivory jersey gown with Alencon lace beaded in seed pearls and an elbow-length veil held by a headpiece of lace and pearls. She carried a nosegay of apricot roses, carnations, baby's breath and ivy.

Karen Bates, Kansas City, Mo., was matron of honor in a copper gown with cowl neckline. She carried mums in shades of gold and dried baby's breath. Identically attired were bridesmaids, Sally Beutel, Chicago; Barbara Buenger, Evanston; and Allyn Kula, Menlo Park, Calif.

Stephen Magnuson, Champaign, was his brother's best man. Another brother, Russell; Curtis Maas, Evanston; and James Torres, Oak Park, ushered.

Mr. and Mrs. Michael Magnuson

After a dinner reception and dancing for 100 guests at the Tower Garden, Skokie, the couple left for a week's honeymoon in Hawaii. They are making their home in Evanston.

The bride, a graduate of Prospect High School and Northwestern, is employed by Northern Trust Bank, Chicago. The groom works for Kemper Insurance Co., Chicago, since graduation.

BIG BIRD listens in as Lauri Schreiber shows Patt Isbell, pediatrics head nurse at Northwest Community Hospital, the Arlington Heights Junior Woman's Club project of painting murals on the department walls. Lauri designed the Sesame Street figures and other club members are filling in the colors. The Juniors' 11:30 a.m. luncheon-auction Thursday at Southminster Presbyterian Church will help provide funds for the artwork. Tickets, $4, may be obtained by calling 259-1108.

Bonnie Hildebrandt – L. Robertson

A pair who met during their sophomore year at Rolling Meadows High, Bonnie Ruth Hildebrandt and Lawrence Dean Robertson, were married Oct. 15 in St. Peter Lutheran Church in Arlington Heights.

Bonnie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Hildebrandt, Rolling Meadows, and Lawrence, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Robertson, Schaumburg, are now residing in Arlington Heights. Both are 1977 graduates of Rolling Meadows and Bonnie is with Allstate Insurance in Northbrook and Lawrence is with Manufacturers and Processors, Inc., Wheeling.

For the 2 p.m. double ring service Bonnie made her own gown of white knit with lace panel and lace trim. A jeweled, lace headpiece held her fingertip veil, and she carried a lace hanky carried by her mother at her wedding. Bonnie also carried the prayerbook carried by her mother, which was topped with orchids.

SYLVIA PEPICH, Schaumburg, was Bonnie's maid of honor, and Barb Patterson and Rose Shaughnessy, Rolling Meadows, the groom's sisters-in-law, Denise Robertson, Charleston, Ill., and Mary Robertson, Louisville, Ky., and his cousin, Leslie Robertson, Northbrook, were bridesmaids.

Sylvia wore a pleated apricot gown with matching cape; the bridesmaids wore identical gowns in shrimp. All carried rust carnations with off-white straw flowers. Also in apricot with eyelet pinafore was the 6-year-old flower girl, Michelle Greif. Michelle carried her carnations in a basket made by the groom's mother.

Frank Stachowiak, Palatine, was best man, and ushers were the couple's brothers, Bill and Mike Robertson and John and Mark Hildebrandt, along with the bride's cousin, Gus Storm, Manistee, Mich.

A reception for 190 guests was held in the cafeteria of St. Peter School.

Networks run hard to catch top ratings

If you have trouble trying to decide between "The Godfather Saga," "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid" and "The Poseidon Adventure" this weekend, just blame the networks.

During this hotly contested ratings book period, ABC and NBC are doing battle this weekend with big box office films while CBS sticks to its uncertain regular series line-up in an attitude that's bound to win them third place.

The ratings book period is like a job review. It's the month when the ratings services, A. C. Nielsen and Arbitron, survey all the television stations in the country, record and average their ratings and make the numbers available for prospective advertisers interested in buying commercial air time on the station with the most attractive demographics and raings.

SINCE ADVERTISING dollars are the lifeline for commercial television, and since they are most often bound and determined by the ratings set during three books periods each year, including the one in November, the networks gear up for program battle completely insensitive to any confusion they might be causing viewers.

The irony of this came just this past week when ABC and NBC ran three-part reports during their nightly networks news on the philosophy and importance of ratings.

This is the month when ABC, CBS and NBC are pulling last minute program changes, temporarily yanking their regular shows with low ratings and replacing them with specials or shows that have satisfactory ratings.

A perfect example this weekend is the airing of "Tabitha," ABC's pilot about the offspring of Elizabeth Montgomery in "Bewitched," which did well in the ratings when it first aired last spring. "Tabitha" will be seen Saturday at 7 p.m. on Channel 7 in place of "Fish," which hasn't been doing that well in its second season.

"BUTCH CASSIDY AND THE SUNDANCE KID"

THEN ABC GETS a half hour jump on NBC's first part of the four-part "Godfather Saga" by starting "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid" at 7:30 p.m. Saturday on Channel 7 in place of "Operation Petticoat" which is one of the network's most poorly rated shows, "Starsky and Hutch" whose ratings have dropped from last season and "Love Boat" which is doing respectably in the ratings.

ABC fills its regularly scheduled movie spot Sunday with "The Poseidon Adventure" at 3 p.m. on channel 7 against the second installment of "The Godfather Saga."

Viewers are going to be confused by a lot of switching around of scheduled shows this month as the networks come to a decision about which new shows they plan to cancel and which they plan to keep.

The announcements are due any day and by the looks of the ratings during the first eight weeks of the new season, don't expect to see too much more of the following:

- ABC: "San Pedro Beach Bums," "Fisn," "Operation Petticoat" and "Redd Foxx."
- NBC: "Big Hawaii," "Rosetti and Ryan," "Oregon Trail," "Chico and the Man" and who knows what else because the network's series schedule is so weak, anything could go.
- CBS: "The Fitzpatricks," "We've Got Each Other," "Busting Loose," "Dan'l Boone" and "Rafferty."

All but ABC generally have weak regular series offerings this season. The networks are tampering with their schedules like mad and groping for ratings with specials and popular theatrical films.

There is a lot of advertising money and pride at stake in this dangerously obsessive game of ratings.

IT IS ESTIMATED that advertisers will spend more than $6 billion on television air time this season. One minute of commercial air time on a badly rated show might sell for about $85,000 compared to four times that price for a minute commercial on a well-rated show.

The gross profits that a network stands to make on a poorly-rated show from the advertising sold is about $95,000 compared to a gross profit of about $395,000 on a well-rated show.

The networks aren't worried about profit and loss because profit is inevitable. They are just worried about making more of a profit than the other guy.

That sad tale brings us back to this weekend. Avid television viewers are urged to retrieve their popcorn poppers and soft sitting-cushions from their storage places for not just this weekend but literally the rest of the month.

FEATURE FILMS that made good at the box office will abound and some of those will include '"the Three Musketeers," "Three Days of the Condor," "From Noon Till Three" and "Family Plot."

WGN-TV, independent station Channel 9, has even jumped into the act with a special package of good feature films, expected to steal some of the traditional network viewers and include the likes of "The

ROBERT DeNIRO IN "THE GODFATHER SAGA"

Good, the Bad and the Ugly," "Rio Grande," "The Day of the Jackal," "Doctor Doolittle" and "Midnight Cowboy."

But with lots of other kinds of special programming scheduled on all three networks later this month, this weekend will prove to be the most competitive in the area of feature films.

NBC's "Mario Puzo's 'The Godfather:' The Complete Novel for Television," may just pull the four consecutive night ratings it needs to stay ahead of CBS and in second place behind ABC in this month's ratings race.

THE NINE-HOUR epic drama is representative of the careful, artistic effort that rightfully should go into the reshaping of theatrical films for television.

Writer-Director Francis Ford Coppola worked closely with film editor Barry Malkin to dismantle the Academy Award-winning Paramount films, "The Godfather" (1972) and "The Godfather, Part II" (1974), to creat the new television movie.

They mostly worked 11,000 miles apart, with Coppola shooting his Vietnam film "Apocolypse Now" on location in the Phillippines and Malkin working in New York. It took more than eight months to weave the two films in chronological order and interspersing about one hour of never-before-seen segments that were originally deleted from both movies.

What viewers have then, airing four consecutive nights, tonight through Tuesday from 8 to 10 p.m. except for the finale which will run 7 to 10 p.m. on Channel 5, is basically a completely different film.

THE STORY OF the fictional immigrant Vito Corleone, who rises to the higher echelons of organized crime in New York, is still the artful work it was in two parts. This time, Robert DeNiro starts off the film as a young Italian immigrant who, having seen his mother and the rest of his family slain by a powerful landowner, comes to New York where he marries and eventually loses his job because of mob pressure on his employer.

In later years, as Corleone enters a life of organized crime and becomes a prominent Don, he is portrayed by Marlon Brando. Eventually his son, Michael, played by Al Pacino, takes over the family business and, well, we all know the rest of the story.

Certain scenes of extreme violence and sex in the movies have been toned down to suitable fare for television but no particular slicing, repasting or harm is evident in the film epic which will probably go down in history as a one-of-a-kind.

NBC is airing the movie with a very carefully worded advisory directed to the Italian-American organizations which protested the films when they premiered in the theater and when "The Godfather" made its television debut on NBC in 1974 and are surfacing again now.

Coppola may well have created a third triumph for himself with his extraordinary marriage of his two masterpiece dramas, and it will no doubt prove to be an irresistable package even against ABC's other two award-winning film offerings this weekend and a ratings gold mine for NBC in this month's numbers race.

OTHER WEEKEND TV HIGHLIGHTS:

- Ray Charles hosts "Saturday Night Live" at 10:30 p.m. Saturday on Channel 5.
- CBS presents an animated version of Jules Verne's 1864 tale "Journey to the Center of the Earth" at 4 p.m. Sunday on Channel 2.
- "NBC Salutes Chic Chicago" in a look at the growing fashion industry featuring highlights from a fashion show recently held at the city's new Apparel Center at 10:30 p.m. Sunday on Channel 5.

Three new exhibits open this month at art institute

Three new exhibitions are opening this month at the Art Institute of Chicago.

Masterpieces from the Clarence Buckingham collection of Japanese prints, a selection of the most outstanding prints by major Japanese Ukiyo-e artists, have just been hung and will appear in Gallery 114 through Jan. 15.

A display of 150 rare photographs by more than 50 photographers from the private collection of Andre Jammen of Paris opens Wednesday and continues through Jan. 15. They may be viewed in the A. Montgomery Ward Gallery.

Contemporary Chinese embroideries are featured in an exhibit opening Nov. 19 in Gallery 116. Copies of painted burial cloth from the early Han Dynasty are included.

THERE ALSO ARE several continuing exhibits on display.

A selection of 50 photographs demonstrating processes from early callotype and daguerrotype to 3-M color continues through Nov. 20 in Gallery 106.

Sixty works of the 1970s by 23 persons who represent a new generation of European artists includes sculpture, paintings, photographs and drawings. It is on display in the East Wing through Nov. 27.

Fifteen pen and ink drawings by Chicago artist Charlotte Hart will appear in Gallery 108A through Dec. 4.

Artists' self-portraits in drawings and prints, spanning three centuries, are in Gallery 108 through Dec. 31.

"Recent Accessions of Oriental Art" appear in Gallery 106. The collection includes sculpture, paintings, porcelains, textiles and lacquer.

The Art Institute is open from 10:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday; 10:30 a.m. to 8 p.m. Thursday; 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday; and noon to 5 p.m. Sunday and holidays.

JOHNNY CASH stars with wife June Carter when one of America's "First Families of Country Music" appears on stage at 7:30 p.m. Friday at the Auditorium Theatre, Chicago. Also in the show are Jan Howard and the Tennessee Three. Ticket information, 922-2110.

Sid Caesar, Imogene Coca team up again

Reliving the old days of television, the comedy team of Sid Caesar and Imogene Coca will make its first Chicago appearance in more than 20 years Nov. 19 at the Auditorium Theatre, 70 E. Congress Pkwy.

"Together Again for the First Time!" is the title of the performance, which is a benefit for Hillel Torah Day School in Skokie.

Besides Caesar and Coca, a new musical group, Sonic Power, will present their contemporary sounds. Curtain time is 8:30 p.m.

Tickets are available at $8 to $15 at the theater box office, at Ticketron outlets and Tix-by-Phone, 298-3730. Discount tickets may be purchased at $5.50 to $12.50 at all Unity Savings buildings.

'Nutcracker' opens in Woodstock

"The Nutcracker Suite Ballet," the immortal story of Clara and her enchanted nutcracker, will be performed at the Woodstock Opera House Nov. 25 through Dec. 23 by Pantages Productions.

Evening shows are at 7 p.m. Nov. 25 and Dec. 2, 4, 9, 10, 11, 16, 17, 18, 22, and 23. Matinees are at 2 p.m., Nov. 26, and 27 and Dec. 3, 4, 10, 11, 17, 18, 22 and 23.

Tickets are $5 for adults and $3.50 for students and children. Area restaurants are available for lunches and dinners, and Pantages Productions personnel will help with arrangements if requested. Call 815-338-4212. Group information and show reservations also are available at the above phone number.

Woodstock Opera House is located in Woodstock, on Rte. 14.

Authors to appear at Skokie center

The Off Campus Writers' Workshop will present four of its authors at an autograph party from 1-3 p.m. Thursday at Kroch's and Brentano's Old Orchard Shopping Center, Skokie. All are authors of children's books.

Fern Brown will autograph her new "Scooby Doo Santa Claus Mystery." Charlotte Herman's newest is "Our Snow Man Had Olive Eyes" and Ruth Hooker's is "The Pelican Mystery."

The fourth author to appear will be Mary Kwitz whose most recent book is "Conservation" for children.

HARVEST HANGING

To make this easy fall wall hanging, cut three 1½ yard pieces of jute. Fold them in half. Tie the folded cords to a doorknob or clothesline. Begin to braid the cords a couple of inches from the top, leaving a loop. Use two cords of jute for each of the three parts of the braid. Tie a short piece of jute near the bottom to keep the braid from unravelling. Fringe the ends by pulling apart each cord. Tie a ribbon bow near the top of the braid. Tuck in dried weeds, flowers, or wheat. Now hang it where your family can admire it!

Ask Andy

It's all fall as earth tilts away from sun

Andy sends the two-volume World Book Dictionary to the 23 boys and girls in Miss Debra Pellegrino's second grade class at Ben Franklin School in Indiana, Pa., for their question:

WHEN DOES FALL START?

Autumn this year started on Sept. 22 in the Northern Hemisphere. The starting day varies from year to year, with the season starting on Sept. 23 in 1978 and 1979, and then going back to Sept. 22 for 1980 and 1981.

Many persons call the season fall. This name came about, no doubt, because it is the season of falling leaves. The temperatures are usually rather pleasant during the days for the three-month season that will end on Dec. 20 (winter this year starts on Dec. 21). As winter approaches the days will get cooler with cold rain and snow for many of the Northern Hemisphere's sections.

Changing seasons are caused by the earth's changing position in relation to the sun. We know exactly from the earth's motion when one season ends and the next one begins.

The first day of autumn is called the autumnal equinox. On this day the sun appears directly above the equator and the day is divided almost exactly into 12 hours of daylight and 12 hours of darkness.

A similar event happens in March when spring starts. The day is called the vernal equinox.

In the Northern Hemisphere the sun is at its highest on June 20 or 21 for the start of summer. The day is called the summer solstice. The shortest day falls on either Dec. 21 or 22 when winter starts. This is called the winter solstice.

Pleasant autumn weather doesn't last too long in the polar region of the Northern Hemisphere because extremely cold weather begins early. In the regions closer to the equator, seasonal changes are not great.

In most of North America autumn is usually very beautiful. It's harvest time in many locations and the days are generally warm and sunny. The nights come through with a refreshing crispness about them.

The relative position of the sun and the earth, and therefore the seasons, keeps changing while the earth circles the sun. When the North Pole slants toward the sun, the Northern Hemisphere receives the most sunlight and it is summer there. When the pole slants away from the sun, the Northern Hemisphere receives the least sunlight and it is winter. Autumn begins when the pole starts to slant away from the sun.

Andy sends the 1977 World Book Science Year to Vincent Santeramo, 10, of Chisholm, Minn., for his question:

WHY DO BELLS SOUND DIFFERENTLY?

Bells have been known to exist since 800 B.C. A ceremonial Assyrian bronze bell from this date has been found, and it is known that the Chinese from this time also used bells. The ancient Greeks used bells to announce all important events.

Tones vary in bells from a very high pitch to a low one, according to their thickness and the size. Sets of bells can be made so that each one has a different tone to correspond with the tones of a musical scale. A player can then strike one after another to play a tune.

There are many sets of carillon bells in almost every country of the world that are operated by electricity. Some have 70 or more bells, each one cast to produce its own separate tone.

Send your question on a post card to Ask Andy in care of The Daily Herald, P.O. Box 280, Arlington Heights, Ill. 60006, making sure to include your name, age and address. Entries are open to girls and boys 7 to 17.

Play hits at establishment

Here is another hand taken from one of Easley Blackwood's articles in the ACBL Bulletin.

Note that South reached seven hearts without using Blackwood. Remember that you should not use Blackwood with either a void or a worthless doubleton in an unbid suit.

So South headed for the slam by his club cue bid. North accepted the invitation by bidding four diamonds to show that ace and right or wrong South closed the bidding at seven hearts.

It turned out to be the winning decision although at first glance it looked as if South could only come to 12 tricks. He found the 13th by a suit-establishment play.

He ruffed the spade lead. Played his ace of hearts to pick up the trumps. Played king and ace of diamonds. Discarded his last two diamonds on the ace and king of spades, ruffed a diamond to set up dummy's last diamond for an eventual discard of the 10 of clubs.

A 4-2 diamond break would have defeated the grand slam, but suits break 3-4 almost 68 per cent of the time.

Elk Grove, St. Laurence playoff a mirror matchup

by VIC NOVAK

It's not two teams that will be playing in today's Class 5A state football playoff quarterfinal at Elk Grove High School.

It's really just one, because St. Laurence's Vikings (9-1) and Elk Grove's Grenadiers (9-1) are almost a shadow of each other.

Consider the similarities for the 1:30 p.m. battle:

BOTH PREFER the run to the pass. Defending state champion St. Laurence uses the wishbone offense while Elk Grove uses a pro set. Each one passes only if their running game falters.

Before Elk Grove's 16-13 preliminary round win over Barrington Wednesday, Elk Grove head coach Don Schnake worried about his passing success if Barrington shut down the Grens' running.

Barrington halted the Grenadiers' running in the first half, but could not stop the passing of Elk Grove quarterback Ralph Souder in the second half. Souder completed six of seven passes for 77 yards.

"When you haven't done it (pass) very much, you think you can but you never know," said Schnake. "When you do it under pressure, that's a big plus."

ST. LAURENCE didn't need the pass in stomping Central Suburban League South Division Champion Maine East, 35-0, Wednesday.

Viking quarterback John Granato ran for 11-and 5-yard touchdown runs, fullback Ernie Wulff led all rushers with 119 yards in 20 carries and teammate John Ewald ran seven times for 101 yards, including a 49-yard touchdown run.

The other St. Laurence touchdowns were scored by Pat Tunney and Mike Rager. Naturally they were runs, 33 yards for Tunney and five for Rager.

St. Laurence coach Tom Kavanaugh sounds like Schnake concerning the pass. "We're a running team," said Kavanaugh. "We don't like to throw."

SCHNAKE BELIEVES snapping St. Laurence's wishbone and penetrating its "very physical" defense are the keys to any possible Elk Grove success.

Kavanaugh respects the Grenadier running anl passing game. "We've got to shut down the Elk Grove backs or at least keep them under control," said Cavanaugh. "We've got to keep our eyes on those big ends."

Jack Walsh was the biggest Elk Grove back Wednesday. The 6-foot, 203-pound sophomore rushed for 109 yards in 23 attempts, including both Grenadier touchdowns. Walsh would have had a third, a 97-yard scamper, but it was washed out by a clipping penalty.

Although teammates Jim Meyer and John McCloughan were contained by Barrington, they've been mainstays all season long.

MEYER NETTED 907 yards in 177 carries, a 5.1 yard average and McCloughan gained 278 yards in 32 carries, an 8.6 yard average this year.

Those big Elk Grove ends are David Sargent and Mark Angellotti. Against Barrington, the 6-foot, 182-pound Sargent caught three passes for 46 yards while the 6-foot-4, 205-pound Angellotti hauled in two for 19.

If St. Laurence has to pass, it will

East Leyden to put Elgin on proving ground today

by RICK CHRISTOPHER

"Sooner" or later Elgin's powerful offense will sputter and run aground. However, the Maroons showed no sign of that in their first 10 games, averaging nearly 29 points a game.

"I hear that they have six or seven stars over there at Elgin that eat nothing but Wheaties," East Leyden coach Jack Leese said. "They're supposed to be all-world or something. Well its their chance to show us."

Leese sees the quarterfinal match today between the two undefeated teams as the day of reckoning for the Maroons. Beginning at 1:30 p.m. on the East Leyden's Franklin Park field, Elgin will face its stiffest test of the year.

"THEY'RE VERY physical, strong defensively and can pop the big play at times," Elgin coach Dick Stephens said of East Leyden. "That's enough to keep anyone busy."

East Leyden (10-0) will rely heavily on the famed formations used by the perennial college powerhouse, the Oklahoma Sooners. A disciplined 5-2 defense with a rover back has keyed both teams to surprising success this season.

Last week's Class 5A poll listed the fighting Eagles second behind the state runnerup last year, Glenbard West. The Eagles' 8-7 win over Glenbard in the preliminary round Wednesday should move them to the top.

Led by middle guard and all-state candidate Kurt Bankson, East Leyden's swarming defense limited the No. 1 ranked Glenbard West to 146 total yards, 25 through the air.

Leese did it by slating the 5-11, 220-pound Bankson through the line from his middle guard position breaking up Glenbard's blocking. Tackle John Kasser looped outside end Scott Anderson, while 158-pound cornerback John Hornewer came up quickly to close down the outside.

"THE KEY WAS to keep their running attack inside," Leese said. "It will be the same old thing against Elgin. Stop the run inside and out.

"They'll definitely be a formidable opponent for us."

Eagles running back Joe Sambucci scored the winning touchdown against Glenbard from 25 yards out in the second quarter. Sambucci was the leading rusher in East Leyden's wishbone attack gaining 85 yards in 13 carries.

Leese implemented the Sooner-style offense into the Eagles game plan nine years ago after his transfer from Glenbrook North.

Quarterback Mike Szydlowski has thrown the ball fewer than 50 times all year as the Eagles option-oriented offense calls for handoffs to Sambucci, Ray Pettenuzzo, and Jim Benedetto — Leyden's hard-running backfield.

"Elgin teams have allowed only 26 points in the three years they've faced a wishbone team," Stephens said. "I'll say we're prepared to face them head-to-head and we have the option people to do it."

MAROON DEFENSIVE ends Craig Feldner and Rick Bell will have the task of turning the play inside toward middle linebacker and leading tackler Mel Cole. Elgin has allowed only two touchdowns by rushing in 10 games.

Elgin's explosive offense, averaging 235 yards a game, has jumped on top early in its past two games against Larkin and Oak Park. Both contests were crucial stepping stones to its current best season mark in Elgin High School history, and Stephens' best record as a coach in eight years at Elgin.

"The kids have worked so hard from the beginning that they know if they get behind it could be all over," Stephens said. "Good teams like Leyden don't let you come back.

"For me, it was my goal to advance one game further than we did last year in the playoffs. We did.

"Now I want one more."

Nets use Bulls to snap loss streak

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. — The one good thing about the Bulls' performance in a 91-89 loss to the Nets here Friday night is that they won't have much time to dwell on their weak showing.

They will take their 7-5 record into Buffalo to play the Braves at 7 p.m. tonight, and if they play like they did against New Jersey, it will be a long evening.

Following two strong outings against Phoenix and Houston, the Bulls came to the Nets' arena with high hopes of extending their modest streak. But they could never get a comfortable pattern going on offense for an extended period of time, and the Nets were able to snap a four-game loss streak.

IT DID NOT matter that the Nets entered the game with only one victory in nine contests. They have been relying on the shooting of rookie Bernard King all year, and he came through against the Bulls.

The former Tennessee star scored 27 points to equal the output of Bulls center Artis Gilmore. But King's running mate at forward, Darnell Hillman, was the leading scorer with 28 points.

That gave the Nets' starting forwards a total of 55 points. Mickey Johnson and Scott May, the Bulls' starting duo at the forward spots, could manage a combined total of only nine points.

May's only basket of the game was a big one, however, as he gave the bulls a 69-68 lead early in the fourth quarter. It was their first advantage since the Nets took charge late in the second quarter to take a 43-39 halftime advantage.

New Jersey opened the second half by quickly building its biggest margin of the game. King's baseline jumper gave the Nets a 56-46 bulge and prompted the Bulls to call a timeout.

AFTER THE BREAK, Chicago got back into the game by outscoring the Nets 13-6 in the next few minutes.

The final quarter scoring saw the lead bounce back and forth until the Nets took charge with three minutes left on the clock. Hillman's jump shot from the left side gave his team an 84-79 lead, which it never lost.

With 1:27 left to play, Wilbur Holland pulled the Bulls to within one point at 88-87 on a 20-footer, but he missed a crucial basket seconds later that would have transferred all the pressure to the Nets.

With only six seconds to go, "Bird" Averitt sank two free throws to lock up the victory for New Jersey.

IN THE FIRST quarter, it looked like the Bulls were going to set the tempo of the contest, something coach Ed Badger had hoped would happen. They scored nine straight points midway through the period to take a 19-12 lead, but then fell apart. During a four-minute span in the second quarter, the Bulls did not score as the Nets began to take their commanding lead.

Gilmore was able to keep the Bulls in the game most of the time when the rest of the offense failed to produce. When he was on the bench, Tom Boerwinkle filled in by producing 10 points.

But that could not help the Bulls, who committed 28 turnovers. So many miscues become costly no matter where a team is playing, but they are almost impossible to overcome on the road.

NU out–Nebraska in Big Ten?

LINCOLN, Neb. (UPI) — A member of the University of Nebraska Board of Regents said Friday he had received several calls inquiring whether negotiations were under way for Nebraska to join the Big Ten Athletic Conference in place of Northwestern University.

Kermit Wagner brought the question up and was told by University of Nebraska-Lincoln Chancellor Roy A. Young he had heard Northwestern might drop out of the Big Ten but had not heard anything else.

Regent Ed Schwartzkopf said the "same rumor (about Nebraska joining the Big Ten) was heard in 1938 and 1939."

Another regent, Dr. Robert Prokop, said, "I know Northwestern is more than likely to drop out and that Nebraska would be considered" as a Big Ten member because the conference is "very anxious" to keep 10 members.

Young said he was "sure no formal negotiations were going on."

Seiter's defense big help in Palatine soccer win

by KEITH REINHARD

DEKALB — Tom Seiter never scored a point or even took a shot on goal here Friday night.

But when the gun sounded ending Palatine High school's opening contest in the state soccer tournament, it was Seiter deserving the biggest round of applause as the Pirates registered a 2-1 victory over Quigley South.

The verdict, upping Palatine's record to 13-5-1 for the season, elevates the Mid-Suburban League entry into today's semifinals at Huskie Stadium on the Northern Illinois University campus.

Palatine will meet the winner of Friday's Morton East-Schurz game at 11:30 this morning.

SEITER, ONE of three outstanding sophomores in coach Rod Gibbs' lineup, played defense to perfection while the Pirates held off a late Quigley surge during the chilly evening.

"He was simply brilliant," said Gibbs of his 5-foot-6, 140-pound halfback. "I don't think anyone could have done a better job of neutralizing Quigley's super-fast forward line."

The Mustangs have a pair of outstanding sophomores, and it was Ralph Degraff and Cneidu Okonman who initiated most of the attacks on Palatine, especially after the Pirates had built a 2-0 advantage.

Okonman finally registered the Mustang goal, breaking in on a feed from Dennis Hannigan midway through the fourth quarter and angling a 20-yarder from the right side into the lower net corner on the cage.

COUNTLESS other times Okonman and Degraff found their efforts frustrated as Seiter, along with Mike Hogan, swept clean the defensive area.

Palatine got on the board halfway through the second quarter when Randy Stewart broke for the net, pulling the Quigley goalie out. His attempt was stopped by a Mustang fullback falling on the ball.

The Pirates were awarded a penalty kick on a handball call, and Taras Jaworsky launched a perfect shot into the left side of the goal.

After halftime, Paltine went up 2-0 and it was Seiter this time helping out on offense. With 15:58 showing in the third quarter the Pirates earned a corner kick and Seiter launched a beautiful serve to Stewart in the middle.

STEWARD HEADED IT sharply home from 10 yards out, catching the Mustang goalie completely off guard.

While Palatine clearly played the most aggressive and disciplined role, especially with the midfield passing game, Quigley came to life during the final 10 minutes of play. Most of the action going down the stretch occurred at the Pirate end of the field and Seiter came up with perhaps his best play of the evening.

With just under seven minutes remaining Okonman picked up a loose ball 15 yards out with his back to a clear goal. He turned, took one dribble and was about to slam an easy shot toward goalie Mike Charlier when Seiter raced from nowhere to slightly deflect it by diving feet first.

In the third quarter Seiter had kicked away another sure goal with Degraff on the drive and Charlier sprawled helplessly on the ground after pusing away a previous shot.

GIBBS ALSO had praise for his wingers, Stewart and Andy Deutschmann, and the play of halfback Ric Puls.

Part of the credit for the victory also has to go to Gibbs for anticipating the usually fast playing conditions. The came was played on artificial turf.

"We knew the surface here was faster than anything we played on before," said Gibbs, "so I've had the boys practicing on the gym floor the past week, four on four."

What worked four-on-four on the gym obviously worked 11-on-11 here in DeKalb Friday night.

Seiter made sure of that.

PIRATE POWER. Palatine's Steve Johnson (19) gives the victory fist after Pirates eliminated Quigley South, 2-1, from the state soccer tourney. Palatine returns to action today at 11:30 a.m.

Deerfield expected to run away with title

by ART MUGALIAN

In a quiet little corner of Peoria — probably the only such corner in Peoria — Deerfield's cross country team today will be asked to prove its superiority for the last time in 1977.

Why the Warriors must travel a couple of hundred miles to confirm a notion that nearly everyone subscribes to already — that is the theory behind championship meets, title games and the World Series.

DEERFIELD IS expected to win its second straight Illinois High School Assn. Class AA harrier title at 11:30 a.m. today at Detweiller Park, every bit as surely as Sandburg's Tom Graves is expected to walk off (run off) with the individual championship for the second consecutive year. The presence of 27 other teams, including Mid-Suburban entries Palatine, Fremd and Arlington, shouldn't keep Deerfield from its appointed rounds.

But, as the coaches are famous for pointing out, anything can happen. What if Deerfitld falls on it's face? What if overconfidence or nervousness or bad vibes cause Deerfield to falter?

That is the hope that hunch-players from Palatine and Fremd are clinging to today. In an ordinary year, the Palatine Pirates and the Fremd Vikings would be battling for the state title with strong teams from York and Glenbard West and maybe even Thornridge.

Strong teams abound in Illinois. But teams like Deerfield come along once in a millenium.

FREMD, A GOOD team with depth and youth, has faced Deerfield three times this season. The Vikings were second to Deerfield at the Crystal Lake Invite early in the season, 34 points back. At the Illiana meet, Deerfield was first with 40 points, Fremd third with 137. In last week's sectional at Crystal Lake, Deerfield stunned the opposition with 30 points and Fremd was third with 73, behind second-place Palatine (71).

Still, Fremd coach Roy Hascup, in his first full year as head coach, insists his team can catch Deerfield.

Maybe so.

Maybe Fremd junior Tom Ross can run with the McCallister twins of Deerfield. Fremd's Dan Inbody, one of only two seniors in the Vikings pack, can be right behind if he runs his best. The rest of the Vikings can stay with Deerfield's pack, and the Vikings may be even deeper than the Warriors.

IF FREMD'S CHANCES of toppling Deerfield depend on its depth, then Palatine's chances reside in a strong "top three." Sectional champ Tom Johnson and teammates Chuck Elliott and Kevin Nikolai, all seniors, could finish in the top 15 individuals.

Last year, when Deerfield won its first state title, Fremd finished sixth and Palatine 11th. Both teams expected to place higher. Both teams had hopes of a state title.

This year, the hopes are restrained. The goals are realistic. To beat Deerfield, it will take not only an outstanding effort by the winning team, but also a less than characteristic performance by Deerfield.

Fremd could run its best race; Palatine could run its best race; but if Deerfield also runs its best race, then Deerfield will win.

THE WARRIORS HAVE Keith Hampton back after a long layoff because of a thigh injury. Hampton ran seventh in the sectional meet on Crystal Lake's challenging Veterans' Acres course.

The Warriors would appear to be ready.

Graves, too, appears to be ready. The sturdy senior is undefeated in 1977 — undefeated and in a class all by himself. If the Sandburg superstar fails to reclaim his state trophy, it will mark the biggest upset in recent IHSA history.

WHO CAN challenge Graves½ Maybe Fenton senior Jim Spivey, who ran second to Graves in last year's meet and in the state two-mile run in May. Maybe Palatine's Johnson, perhaps the most consistently underrated runner in Illinois.

But who can beat Graves?

The answer to that question, of course, is what this state meet is all about.

Jo Jo returns and Celtics finally win

From Daily Herald wire services

Jo Jo White, who earlier had threatened to sit out the game, scored 23 points to spur the troubled Boston Celtics to a 109-103 win over the Buffalo Braves Friday night in NBA action.

White sat out a Thursday practice and was fined by Celtics General Manager Red Auerbach after he left the club following Wednesday night's loss to San Antonio.

He and the rest of the team were berated in the Celtics locker room after that game for being "quitters" by Auerbach.

But White scored 8 points in the final 2:23 of the game to pull the Celtics from a 101-99 deficit.

HE GOT THE Celtics off to an 11-point lead in the first period. At one point Boston led the game by 15.

The Celtics were also buoyed by a career-high 21 points from rookie forward Cedric Maxwell. Joining them was guard Charlie Scott, who threw in 22 points before fouling out late in the fourth period.

But Buffalo, behind Randy Smith's game-high 33 points, led with as little as 2:05 remaining in the fourth quarter.

The win was the second of the season for the Boston Celtics, who have lost eight. The defeat dropped Buffalo to 5-6.

JOE BRYANT scored 19 points and led an earlier fourth-qarter burst to help the Philadelphia 76ers rally to a 127-119 victory over the New York Knicks.

Doug Collins tallied 30 points to lead Philadepphia, which ran its record under new Coach Billy Cunningham to 4-0. Jim McMillian had 22 points and Spencer Haywood added 20 for New York, which yielded first place in the NBA Atlantic Division to the 76ers.

The Knicks had overcome an 11-point deficit and taken a 93-91 lead early in the fourth quarter when Bryant and Collins started a 17-6 spurt which saw Philadelphia soar to a 108-99 lead. The 76ers increased their lead to as much as 12 points before New York cut the score to 118-115 with three minutes to play. Caldwell Jones' rebound field goal and free throw then sealed the Sixers' victory.

CLEVELAND TOOK care of Milwaukee, 88-82, in a low-scoring game with Walt Frazier within 16 points, one of five players in double figures for the Cavaliers.

The win was Cleveland's sixth in a row and fourth in their five games on the road.

Cleveland led by two points at the half, 49-47, when Foots Walker opened the third period with a layup and Cazzie Russell and Frazier hit jump shots. Jim Brewer scored two free throws, Jim Chones scored on a hook shot, Brewer put in a layup and Chones added two free throws to give Cleveland a 63-47 lead.

Milwaukee, playing withoug leading scorer Brian Winters, pulled to within two points with three minutes left at 84-82 but the Cavaliers scored the last four points of the game.

Russell added 14 points for the Cavs. Junior Bridgeman led Milwaukee with 20 points and Kent Benson had 19.

St. Louis Blues take 2-1 victory

NHL report

From Daily Herald wire services

Bruce Affleck scored an unassisted goal with 3:56 to play in the third period Friday night to give St. Louis a 2-1 victory over the Colorado Rockies and enable the Blues to win just their third game this season in the NHL.

The Blues scored first on a power-play goal in the second period by Inge Hammarstrom at 10:17. The Rockies tied the score on defenseman Barry Beck's goal at 3:23 of the third period.

The win gave St. Louis a 3-10-2 record, while Colorado dropped to 5-4-3.

RON ELLIS SCORED twice in a 4:38 span of the second period to lead the Toronto Maple Leafs to a 3-1 victory over the Washington Capitals.

Ellis, lured out of a two-year retirement by his former team at the start of this season, snapped a 1-1 tie with his first goal of the game. The 33-year-old right wing slipped behind the Washington defense to take a pass from Dave Williams and beat Washington goalie Gary Smith with a 10-foot backhander. Elis closed out the scoring by taking another Williams feed and blasted a 25-foot slapshot past Smith.

Washington broke on top in the contest when Dave Forbes poked in the rebound of Guy Charron shot at 4:20 of the second period. The Maple Leafs' Errol Thompson knotted the contest later in the period with his sixth tally of the season.

Toronto now stands at 8-2-2, including four wins in its last five games — all on the road. Washington fell to 2-9-2.

Parents and students are invited to the cafeteria for refreshments after the ceremonies.

VICTORY OVER DE FEET.

People these days do a lot of running around.
Sometimes for fun. But most of the time they're going someplace. Or coming home from same.
So along comes Puch with a great idea. A method of getting there and back that beats walking by a country mile because it's a lot more fun and doesn't cost a whole lot more.
A Puch has pedals for starting and a peppery little engine for zipping you around without blisters, bunions, or getting out of breath.
It travels at the rate of up to 150 miles per gallon. Starts at about $469. And goes for a long time with practically no maintenance at all.
Do something nice for your feet. Come in and ride a Puch today.

SPIRITED SAXONS — The Saxons of Schaumburg leap with joy after beating the Scouts of Lake Forest, 3-1, in the state girls field hockey tournament at Lake Forest Friday.

Win in overtime, 3-1

Schaumburg girls advance

by VIC NOVAK

An old sports axiom states that the good teams win even when they don't play well.

The Schaumburg High School girls field hockey team proved that saying Friday.

Schaumburg edged host Lake Forest, 3-1, to advance to today's semi final round (9 a.m.) match against Woodstock in the third asnual state tournament.

Like Schaumburg, Woodstock was forced into overtime before defeating DeKalb, 3-1. If Schaumburg, now 14-1, wins this game, they'll play for the state championship at 2:30 p.m. at Lake Forest High Schools east campus.

DESPITE MISSING leading scorer Debbie Robson, Lake Forest dominated regulation play.

Schaumburg coach Kay Winkelhake explained her team lacked aggressiveness, thus allowing Lake Forest to control the action. "They (Schaumburg) didn't play as aggressive as they could of," said Winkelhake. "My forwards were aggressive but my backs were dead. You can't do that against a fast team like Lake Forest."

According to Winkelhake, this unaggressive play created Lake Forest's first goal.

With 8:50 gone in the second half, no Schaumburg defender pressured Lake Forest's Renee Tavernier who took advantage by blistering a shot above Schaumburg goalie Liz Walker's shoulder.

SCHAUMBURG SHOWED they had the fighting spirit of Saxons as Kim Wallner scored with 16:27 gone, tying the game at 1-1. The goal was Wallner's 32nd this season.

"It (the ball) came up from the side," said Kim. "She (Lake Forest goalie Kris Kramer) blocked it (and) Julie Haas of Schaumburg hit it across. I just took it and flicked it in," said Kim.

The overtime consisted of five players from each team alternating shots, called strokes, at the various goalies. The players could flick or push the ball, but not drive it, as in taking a golf swing.

Lake Forest missed its first three attempts but Schaumburg succeeded on its third and fourth for the final two points.

Saxon Leticia Rodriguez tallied on the third penalty stroke.

"I DIDN'T plan anything," said Leticia. "(I) tried to hit it to the goalie's left, because she was stopping everything to the right.

Teammate Faith Peterson notched the final Saxon point.

"I was thinking since we were ahead, we could use some insurance," said Faith.

Even though there was more pressure in overtime than during regulation play, Schaumburg goalie Liz Walker believed facing the penalty strokes was an easier task.

"I think it's easier during penalty strokes, because you know who's going to shoot the ball at you and where it's coming from," said Walker.

THE LOSS was a bitter one for Lake Forest, now 9-7. The Scouts had lost Schaumburg earlier this season, 3-0.

"It's a rotten way to lose," said Winkelhake in sympathy with Lake Forest coach Mary Beth Zolli.

The Saxon coach would not say whether her team could win the state championship. "It will be a fight all the way," said Winkelhake.

Win or lose, Schaumburg followers have the satisfaction of knowing Winkelhake considers this team the best in her six years as Schaumburg's coach.

STICKY SITUATION. A Schaumburg player and her Lake Forest opponent battle for the ball during the third annual girls state field hockey tourney at Lake Forest High School's east campus Friday. Schaumburg's 3-1, overtime win qualifies it to meet Woodstock in the semifinals at 9 a.m. today.

'Everything's cool' according to White

BOSTON — Boston Celtics' All-star guard Jo Jo White ended his one-day "retirement" Friday night when he showed up for a scheduled game against the Buffalo Braves.

White was the target of some biting remarks by General Manager Ed Auerbach after Wednesday night's game and reportedly said he was quitting. He returned to the team after missing a Thursday practice and meeting Friday with Auerbach and Coach Tom Heinsohn.

"Everything's cool now," White said Friday before the game. "If we win tonight I'll know that what I did had a positive effect on the team."

The seven-time all-star guard was fined and for a while it appeared White threatened to leave the team. The Celtics are off to their worst start in memory.

"It's a lot of different things — the team, my foot, personal problems," White said Thursday in explaining his absence from practice.

Bench signs five-year contract

CINCINNATI — Catcher Johnny Bench, making a potential commitment to play the rest of his baseball career in Cincinnati, Friday signed a five-year contract with the Cincinnati Reds.

The 10-year veteran, long considered one of the best catchers in baseball, was nagged by a minor knee injury most of last season, but still managed to hit 31 home runs, knock in 109 runs, bat .275 and continue his tough defensive play.

Bench, 29, starred in the 1976 World Series, and was named Most Valuable as he hit .533 to lead the Reds to a four-game romp over the New York Yankees.

"I'm delighted with the five-year agreement," Bench said Friday after the contract was announced by General Manager Dick Wagner. "I had no idea what they (the Reds) wanted when we began contract negotiations. I always said I wanted to stay in Cincinnati."

Tigers refuse to join bidding war

DETROIT — The Detroit Tigers have joined the St. Louis Cardinals and Cincinnati Reds in declining to sign free agent talent.

The Tigers announced Friday they were ending all attempts to sign any of the six players they selected in last week's major league re-entry draft.

The announcement followed a similar one by the St. Louis Cardinals. The Cincinnati Reds abstained from selecting any players in last week's draft.

Owner John E. Fetzer of the Tigers said he is complete agreement with August A. Busch Jr., president of the Cardinals, who called the re-entry situation "completely out of hand."

Detroit's top choice was George "Doc" Melich, who signed a four-year contract for a reported million dollars with the Texas Rangers.

Royals sign free agent Terrell

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Kansas City Royals Friday announced the signing of free agent Jerry Terrell, a 31-year-old utility player formerly with the Minnesota Twins.

Terrell signed a multi-year contract with the club late Friday. He was selected by Kansas City in the eighth round of the major league baseball reentry draft Nov. 4. He played out his option with the Twins in 1977.

Manager Whitey Herzog said Terrell "fills one of our biggest needs, especially since Cookie Rojas has retired. If George Brett got hurt, he would be our third baseman. I won't hesitate to use him at second or shortstop and I have confidence in him as a pinch-hitter and pinch-runner."

Track must admit vet – for now

MINEOLA, N.Y. — The State Racing and Wagering Board was ordered Friday to lift its suspention of Dr. Mark Gerard, the 43-year-old veterinarian suspected of switching horses in a Sept. 23 race at Belmont Park Race Track.

Neil Shayne, an attorney for Gerard, said the order was signed Thursday night by State Supreme Court Justice Eli Wager and requires the racing board to show cause why it should not be held in contempt of court for refusing to allow Gerard to treat horses at Belmont.

The order contains a temporary injunction which prohibits the racing board from barring Gerard's admittance to the track.

Kareem criticizes O'Brien

Jabbar: Benson deserved a fine

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (UPI) — Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, speaking out for the first time since being fined $5,000 by Lawerence O'Brien for punching Milwaukee rookie Kent Benson Oct. 18, criticized the NBA commissioner Friday for not taking any disciplinary action against Benson.

"I recognize that my conduct in the Benson incident was a proper subject of league discipline," Abdul Jabbar said at a Forum news conference, "but I am extremely upset that the league office not only imposed no fine on Benson but failed in its public pronouncements about the incident even to recognize the responsibility Benson has.

"To me, what happened was clear. The film clips confirm my view of what happened. If the league office had any questions about what happened, it might have at least asked the participants to give their views prior to making a decision.

"Surely, the fact that the referees did not see the foul on me does not justify the commissioner's inaction or silence on the matter, particularly since he was not inactive or silent about my conduct.

"Even in one of the most violent sports (NFL-Commissioner) Pete Rozelle recently said that unnecessary violence is a matter for league discipline 'whether or not it is detected by the game ffficials.' "

A spokesman for O'Brien said the reason the commissioner did not fine Benson was because the foul went unseen by the officials. The spokesman added that even though O'Brien felt Benson's foul, if detected, was flagrant enough to draw an automatic two-shot foul, it was not sufficient cause for Abdul-Jabbar to react the way he did.

Abdul-Jabbar, a 7-2 superstar and a five-time MVP, fractured his right hand when he hit Benson two minutes into the Lakers' league opener at Milwaukee. Benson, a 6-11, 245-ounder from Indiana, suffered a mild concussion.

A cast was removed from Abdul-Jabbar's hand Wednesday, and the Lakers, who were 4-6 going into Friday night's game against New Orleans, hope to have him back against Detroit next Friday night. If he can play then, he will have missed 13 games.

be against an Elk Grove secondary considered to be a possible weak link by some observers. Buffalo Grove passed for 131 yards versus Elk Grove and Barrington's Bruce Henricksen riddled the Grenadier defense for 229 yards.

Schnake thinks his pass defense is good enough, and that no defense could stop Henricksen, who completed 60 per cent of his passes this season, setting an all-time Mid-Suburban League record.

"I FEEL GOOD about the fact that we pretty well contained them on the scoreboard," said Schnake.

Whoever controls the other's running attack will be the winner today.

Both have a winning tradition. St. Laurence is the Catholic League champion and Elk Grove holds the Mid-Suburban League South Division title.

Both have state playoff experience. Besides the St. Laurence success, Elk Grove went no further than last year's quarterfinal round before losing to Belleville West, 24-21.

The Grenadiers hope they'll go beyond that stage this year.

Purdue game today a must for Michigan

College football

The pressure to win is on Michigan today.

The Wolverines need to avenge last year's loss to Purdue to stay in contention for the Big Ten title and a Rose Bowl bid, and they want to protect their No. 6 national ranking.

A Purdue win would hand Ohio State the Big Ten title and a berth in the Rose Bowl, regardless of the outcome of the Buckeye-Wolverine clash Nov. 19 in the season finale. Ohio State can clinch a title tie by beating Indiana and would take an undisputed title if Purdue wins.

Ohio State heads into the weekend with a 6-0 Big Ten record and undisputed first place in the conference while Michigan is second at 5-1 and Michigan State third at 4-1-1. No other team has a chance to finish in the top three.

SHOULD MICHIGAN lose, Michigan State could climb into second place with a win at home over Northwestern, which has lost 25 of its last 26 games with its only victory last year over the Spartans. But Michigan State is ineligible for a bowl.

Spartans' Coach Darryl Rogers discounted Northwestern's poor record, nine games without a win this year, and said he was "scared to death."

"Northwestern's defensive and offensive lines are excellent," he said, "and their offense is better than a lot of guys getting all the publicity. They've got the ability to score. They went 98 yards against Michigan for a touchdown and scored 20 points, and if we're not at our best, we're going to have problems."

In the other two conference games, Minnesota will be at Illinois and Iowa will play at Wisconsin, where Coach John Jardine this week announced his retirement at the end of the season.

Purdue's Jim Young, his team boasting a three-game winning streak, didn't discount the possibility of a win over Michigan, but said, "We're going to have to play a sound game to win."

Victory for the Boilermakers could hinge on the success of Mark Herrmann's passing. Herrmann, the league leader in passing and total offense, could pick apart the Michigan secondary since he'll be throwing to four receivers who rank in the top 13 in the Big Ten.

Linebacker nice gift for Pardee

by BOB GALLAS

Christmas came early for Bears coach Jack Pardee Friday. He found a linebacker.

Anxious to strengthen their sagging linebacker corps, the Bears signed veteran linebacker Mel Rogers, whose last stop was with the Rams, then went to work giving him a cram course to prepare him for Sunday's game with Kansas City at Soldier Field.

"He'll be ready if needed," said Pardee, who indicated Rogers would play only in an "emergency situation," at least this week.

ROGERS, 30, is in his fifth pro season, the 6-foot-2, 230-pound graduate of Florida A & M played in 11 games for the Rams last year as a backup outside linebacker. He was dropped by the Rams on the final cut before the regular season this year.

To make room for Rogers on the roster, the Bears cut defensive tackle-end Greg Johnson, who joined the club only two weeks ago. "He (Johnson) hadn't shown as much as we expected, and we needed a linebacker," said Pardee.

Neither of the strating outside linebackers for the Bears will play Sunday. Doug Buffone still will be in the hospital, recovering from viral pneumonia and Waymond Bryant has a shoulder injury, though can play "in an emergency," said Pardee.

Pardee said it shouldn't take as long for a player to learn the Bear defense as the offense, especially in view of Rogers' experience.

"THAT'S THE reason we chose him. He's been around and can recognizt many of the things he'll see on defense already," said Pardee. "If they go with a play-action pass, he should be able to recognize it's a pass not a run."

Rogers played in 13 games for the San Diego Chargers in 1971 but missed the entire 1972 season with an injury. He came back in 1973 to play in 10 games. He was released after three games in 1974, hooked on with the Washington Redskins and later the Philadelphia Bell of the World Football League in 1975 before joining the Rams.

Jerry Muckensturm, who started last week on the left side for Buffone, will start again Sunday. Rookie Gary Campbell, who played briefly in place of Bryant last week, will make his first start Sunday on the right side.

The linebacking corps was desperate for a backup. Don Rives has been playing on two aching knees all year at the middle linebacker spot. Rives' backup, Tom Hicks, who has also played the outside spots, was the only backup for all three linebacker spots but Hicks has been nursing a shoulder injury that may require surgery after the season and hasn't played much this year.

EVEN THE coaches have gotten into the act when it comes to illness and injuries, which have swept the Bear camp this week. Special team coach John Hilton had to be rushed to the hospital Thursday night and underwent an emergency apendectomy.

Punter Bob Parsons, who turned his ankle while running a pass pattern in practice Thursday, has been added to the Bears injured list as a "probable" starter. Pardee said Parsons will see "limited" duty on special teams but might be able to punt. If not, the Bears will turn to two backup punters, Walter Payton and Robin Earl.

"Who we use would depend on our field positions," Pardee said. "Robin has worked more at it this year but Walter can get the ball off quicker. If we're at midfield we'd probably use Earl but if we were backed up, we'd go with Walter."

In addition to the two new faces on defense, Earl will start in place of the injured Roland Harper at fullback. The Bears will have the odds against them when Kansas City comes into town, despite the Chiefs' lowly 2-6 record. The NFC has lost 10 of 11 games with American Football Conference teams this year.

NFL weekend matchups may result in big logjam

NFL report

Several key games Sunday may produce one of the biggest logjams in the NFL standings in years and set the stage for some real pressure down the stretch this season.

By the end of the weekend, four of the six divisions could have co-leaders and one division, the AFC Central, could have a four-way tie for first place.

A victory by Pittsburgh over Cleveland combined with Cincinnati and Houston triumphs would result in all four AFC Central teams having 5-4 records.

CLEVELAND goes into the game with a one-game lead in the AFC Central, but the Browns never have won the seven straight trips to Pittsburgh's Three Rivers Stadium.

Cincinnati and Houston may have a more difficult time setting up the deadlock, however, as the Bengals take on NFC Central Division leader Minnesota and the Oilers go against AFC Western Division co-leader Oakland.

A victory by Detroit at Atlanta combined with a Minnesota loss would put the Vikings and Lions in a tie for first place in the NFC Central Division. On the other hand, if Atlanta beats Detroit and Green Bay manages to win at home against Los Angeles, the WFC Western Division would have the Rams and Falcons as co-leaders.

A division tie already exists in the AFC West between Denver and Oakland and victories by the Bronco's and Raiders would give them identical 8-1 records.

If Buffalo can ambush Baltimore they way it did New England last week and Miami hands the Patriots another loss, the AFC Eastern Division also may have a pair of co-leaders in the Colts and Dolphins.

THE DAILY HERALD

Safety is right on target

The lead and steel are flying.

The opening of the upland game season at daybreak today has signaled the influx of even more hunters into the field. Already on the firing line are waterfowlers who have been pumping lead and steel shot at ducks and geese since Oct. 22.

Pheasant, rabbit, Hungarian partridge and quail are the newest targets and the first phase of shotgun deer season explodes on the scene Friday.

Not surprisingly, this, the most active and chaotic week of the hunting calendar, also is the time most hunting-related accidents occur.

CARELESSNESS and ignorance are commonly to blame for the mishaps and one of the major causes of firearm accidents is unfamiliarity with the gun.

Loading improper shells into the chamber is begging for barrel damage, obstruction or backfire and personal injury.

Not knowing when the safety is engaged is another excuse that results in an excessive number of injuries each season.

Many novice shooters automatically think they know the shotgun and its operation as soon as they open the package. But the manual will indicate which loads to use in the gun and warn against those cartridges for which the gun was not designed.

Jim Cook

THE FOLLOWING is a list of some, but not all, of the possible combinations of the misuse of sporting arms and ammunition. The combinations listed are typical of those in which a cartridge generally will fire in a shotgun not chambered for it.

Some practices may result in split or ruptured cartridge cases that may release products of combustion. These powder blasts are often the cause of accidents to the shooter and bystanders. There is also the possibility of a slug remaining in the bore and forming an obstruction.

In shotguns chambered for 10 gauge, do not use 12-gauge ammo. Likewise, do not use 16-gauge shells in 12 gauge or 20-gauge ammo in 16-gauge guns.

In shotguns chambered for a 410 bore, do not use these cartridges: 219 Zipper, 30-30 Winchester, 303 British, 32 Winchester Special, 32-40 Winchester, 35 Winchester, 38 Winchester, 38-40 Winchester, 44 Smith & Wesson Special, 44 Remington Magnum or 44-40 Winchester.

WITH ANY GAUGE, shot shells of a given length should not be fired in a gun the chamber length of which is shorter than the fired shell length, unless specifically recommended by the manufacturer and clearly marked. These occasions are rare.

Bulged or burst shotgun barrels usually result when a shell of smaller gauge than that for which a shotgun is chambered is dropped into the bore and a shell of the correct gauge fired behind it.

Some of the likely combinations when a smaller gauge shell will remain in the bore and act as an obstruction are 16 gauge shells in a 12-gauge chambered shotgun, 16 gauge shells in a 10-gauge gun, 20-gauge shells in a 12-gauge gun, and 28 gauge shells in both 16 and 20-gauge guns.

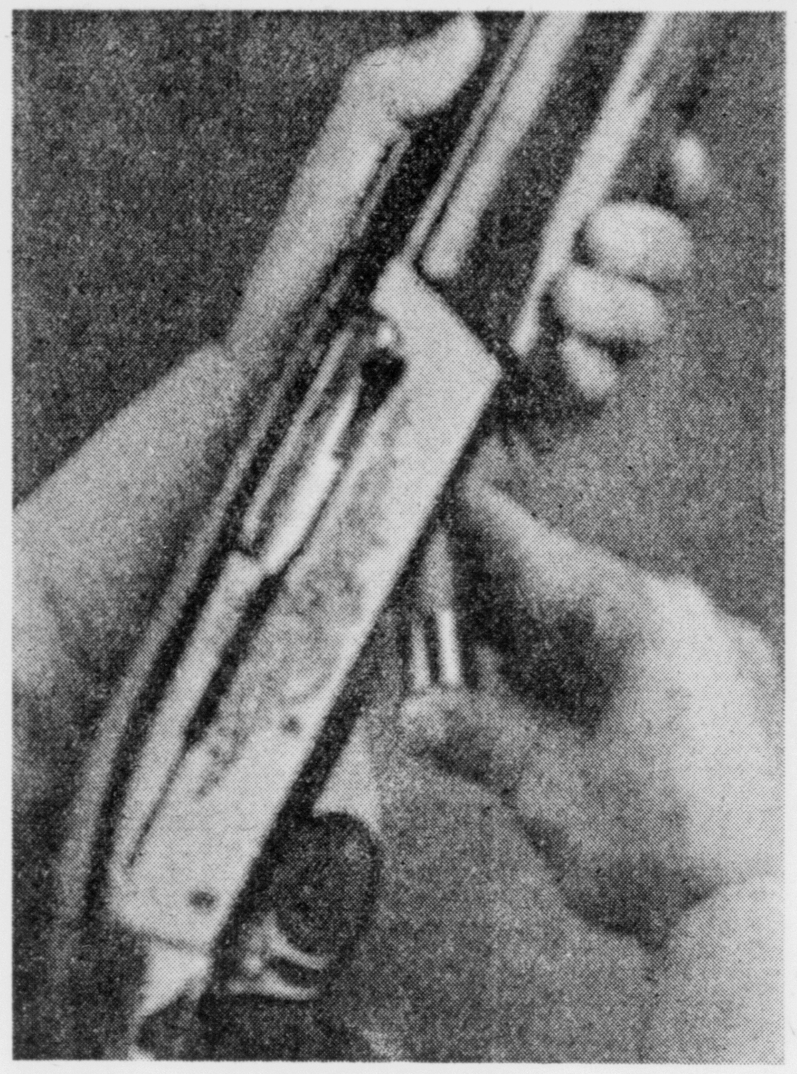
The rim of the smaller gauge shell stops at the forcing cone or lead from the chamber to the bore, permitting the insertion of a shell of the proper gauge.

CONVERSELY, shot shells and shotgun chambers are designed so that the proper size of shell after firing will not extend too far into the forcing zone or tapered area between the chamber and the bore.

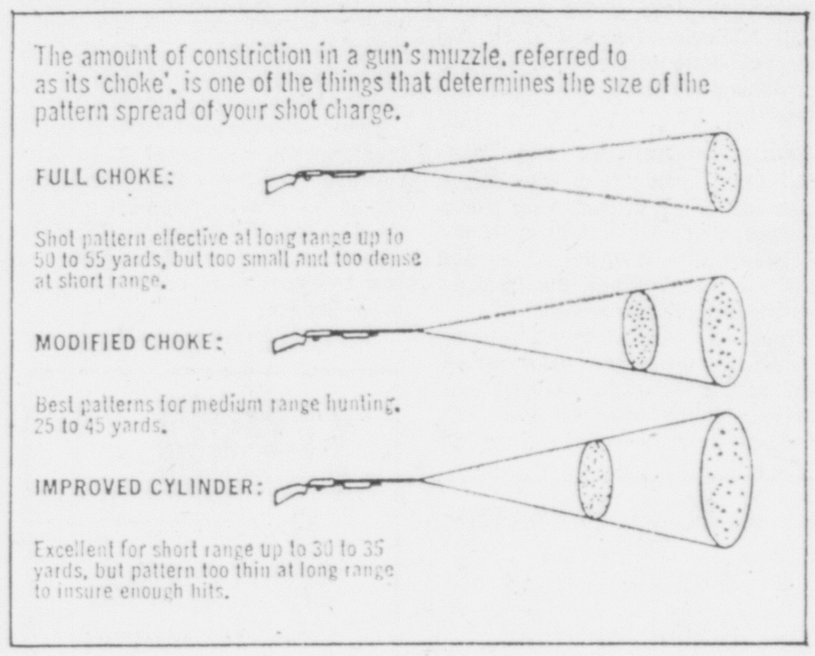
The use of long shells in short chambers will increase pressures which may become excessive. Other hazardous conditions such as the cartridge failing to eject in automatic shotguns, also may result.

The use of shells having a longer length than the opening of the gun chamber is obviously to be avoided.

Gun ignorance is inexcusable. Get to know the firearm thoroughly — its capabilities and limitations.



LOADING improperly-sized shells into a shotgun chamber can result in damage to the barrel or personal injury to the shooter.



Ski prices steep; insurance cited

by PETER MAY

CONCORD, N.H. (UPI) — New Hampshire ski area operators are hopeful rising energy and insurance costs don't wipe out what is projected to be anothr long, cold and profitable winter.

The winter of 1976-77 may have caused fuel bills to go out of sight, but it also turned white ski slopes into veritable gold mines. Virtually all ski areas said turnout was at an all-time high and many areas reported record earnings.

But despite predictions of a repeat winter by such noted prophets as Abe Weatherwise of the Old Farmers Almanac, operators are not all smiling and bubbling with optimism.

"OUR INDUSTRY is beleaguered because of the increasing operational costs," said George Hamilton, who handles affairs for New Hampshire's two stateowned ski areas — Cannon Mountain in Franconia and Mt. Sunapee.

"We've had to reduce our liability coverage from $600,000 to $400,000, yet our premiums have doubled. We don't know what's going to happen to electric rates, except they're going to go up," Hamilton said.

Sunapee and Cannon grossed $1.5 million last winter, the best ever. But Hamilton said ticket prices at both areas will be higher this year because of the energy and insurance problems.

The reason for much of the concern over liability insurance comes from a June decision by a Vermont court. The Chittenden County Superior Court awarded James Sunday, 24, of Burlington, Vt., $1.5 million because of a 1974 accident at Stratton Mountain.

SUNDAY IS ALMOST totally paralyzed because of a fall cauaed by some brush on a trail. The court said sophisticated snow making operations meant the mountain was responsible to produce well-groomed trails, and that the skier does not assume all the risks.

The case has been appealed to the Vermont Supreme Court, which is not expected to act on it until next summer.

"We think it's a gross oversimplification to assume that the risk no longer belongs to the skier because of sophisticated snow grooming equipment. But that's what it looks like is going to be the view of the judicial system," Hamilton said.

New Hampshire law places liability with the skier, said Ernest Hegi, manager at Gunstock Ski Area in Gilford. But that has not stopped his insurance premiums from increasing, nor can it do anything to stem the tide of rising energy costs.

"TICKET PRICES have risen for the first time in three years. That's to offset rising energy costs, rising insurance costs, rising labor costs, rising everything," Hegi said.

Stan Judge at Wildcat Mountain in Gorham says 1976-77 showed a 30 per cent increase in turnout during the best year, but profits were 15 per cent less.

"Insurance rates are more of an industry problem than a problem affecting a particular area. We got socked for a 100 per cent increase over the last three years. This year, we'll have about a five per cent increase," Judge said.

Ticket prices at Wildcat also will be rising for the prime tourist times, the weekends and holiday weeks. Judge said ski areas are caught in a bind because it also costs more for gasoline to get one to the slopes.

"WE'RE COMPETING for the discretionary dollar, the one you have left over. There has to be electricity for us to run and gas for people to get here. I really don't know where we're going to be in a few years, but right now, energy costs are a big bite out of our income," Judge said.

Thomas Corcoran, president of posh Waterville Valley, favorite stop for the Kennedy clan and other celebrities, said his insurance costs are stabilizing after two years of increase and that energy costs are increasing because of inflation.

Lakes start turning healthy green

Green generally is not regarded as a healthy color for a person and it's not for a lake either. But in the case of a body of water, a green algae bloom actually can be an improvement if it has displaced blue-green algae.

The displacement of blue-green algae on three lakes in Lake County signifies to Illinois Dept. of Conservation fishery biologist Gary Erickson that aerators are helping to improve the water quality. Erickson has monitored the three — Third, Long, and Turner Lakes — since installation of each of their aeration systems in 1973.

Commercially available aeration devices have been used for several years to prevent excessive aquatic vegetation and winter kill of fish. But whether an aerator can effectively retard the eutrophication process that ages and eventually destroys a lake has not been determined.

"Nobody has looked at these systems over a long period of time," Erickson said of the aeration devices now on the market. Before his study, the longest period during which use of an aerator was monitored was 18 months.

Urban stormwater drainage, abnormally rich with nutrients from lawn fertilizer and septic system leaks, can drastically shorten the life span of a glacial lake, Erickson said.

Eutrophication is the loss of oxygen in a body of water overburdened by decomposing organic material. When too much organic material accumulates, oxygenation is replaced by other chemical processes 6 to 10 times slower in breaking down material. Eventually, all aquatic life dies and the lake fills, becoming solid ground. This process is natural, but has been accelerated by urban development near lakes.

Seeing green algae instead of blue-green indicates to Erickson the aerators are working. Blue-green algae often gives off an offensive olor and can be toxic to fish and animals.

ANOTHER FAVORABLE sign has been greater oxygen content in the water, particularly at lower depths. Before this year, no oxygen could be found at 10 feet below the surface of Third Lake, Erickson said. This year oxygen was found 20 feet from the surface.

Twice each year, Erickson collects water samples to measure oxygen content, ph-factor (acid) and alkalinity. He tries to measure the water during the two periods of the year when it is most stagnant. This necessitates cutting through the ice in February to sample the water before the minor spring turbulence known as the overturn, caused by temperature changes in the water. He also tests the water in September.

The aerators used on each of the lakes are point-release aerators, in which an air release tube is laid on the bottom of the lake. Air is pumped through the tube and into the water with a small electrical compressor.

THE OXYGEN PUMPED into the water does not dissolve and substantially add to the dissolved oxygen content of the water, Erickson said. Instead, it creates an updraft and contact of more water with the surface air creates the desired oxygenation.

1977 called year of the musky

Veteran observers of musky fishing in northwest Wisconsin have noted that 1977 seems to be the year of the big musky. An unusual number of exceptional trophy fish have been taken this summer.

The largest fish reported — a 57½ inch, 48½ pounder — was taken from Big Sissabagama Lake in Sawyer County while a 54-inch, 47-pound lunker was caught in Pike Lake in Price County.

Shell Lake in Washburn County yielded several fish from 25 to 41 pounds, while other trophy fish were taken from the Pike Lake Chain and Eau Claire Lakes in Bayfield County.

New business hopes to beef up quality

by JOHN N. FRANK

Al Wilkens is a man with a passion for a good steak who has invested more than $250,000 in the belief others will come to share that passion.

"I know that there's quality and I know that there's a certain segment of the public that wants it and it has nothing to do with income or social class," says the 37-year-old Wilkens.

And so he has opened the Chicago Beef Co. at Woodfield Mall, Schaumburg, to sell quality meats.

"We are not a butcher shop, we are purveyors of quality meats," Wilkens says.

HE SEEKS TO ensure the quality of what he sells by personally overseeing every step of the supply process that brings him his products.

He selects the feed lots' cattle. He has plants that vacuum-pack and quick freeze his meat within 15 minutes of its cutting to ensure the best possible taste. He even has assembled his own fleet of trucks to ship the frozen beef from the plants to the store to ensure that its temperature will remain constant.

Sudden drops and rises in temperature would affect the tastiness of the meat and damage the quality he's seeking, Wilkens says.

HIS MEAT also is more finely trimmed of fat than grocery store meat and each item he sells comes in portion sizes complete with cooking instructions and a guarantee of quality, he says.

"What we're trying to tell people is they should buy better. Why not buy things you want trimmed the way you want them," the 37-year-old Wilkens says.

His prices, which range from $1.19 for an eight-ounce chuck steak to $23.50 for a five-pound rib eye roast, are, in some cases, higher than grocery store prices, but that isn't worrying Wilkens.

"We aren't competing with groceries. They believe that the public is not worried about quality, only price per pound," he says.

"What we're selling is value and uniform value. We're trying to position out business as an alternative to eating out. We want to be an alternative to eating out at a much lower price with very high quality," he says.

WILKEN'S OBSESSION with quality meat goes back to his childhood in Wilmette, he says.

"For 30 years my parents bought from a butcher in Wilmette. But it's harder for butchers to get good meat," Wilkens says.

He has been in the meat business about five years, heading another firm that sells meats to firms which supply area restaurants and hotels with their meat, he says.

He decided to open his own store after attempts to market his quality meat in convenience stores and a drugstore failed.

OTHERS HAVE tried selling quick-frozen beef and failed, but Wilkens says his Woodfield location will help him succeed.

"Several packers have gone broke and the reason is they couldn't get it to the public. But this is where the merchandising action is. People are here. If we get the traffic, then we can keep the prices low," Wilkens says.

And if he gets the traffic needed to prosper at Woodfield, Wilkens has plans to franchise his concept, opening 70 stores across the country by 1981, he says.

HIS WIFE HAS become involved in the project, managing the Woodfield store, he says. She may eventually write the company's training manual using her background as a technical writer, Wilkens says.

Wilkens has invested more than $250,000 in his first store, hiring an advertising agency and a food photographer to make his brochures and displays visually appealing. He spent a month researching which color would look best as background for his meats in his display freezers.

Black was chosen "because it showed the red of the meat and the white of the fat best. That's another sign of good meat, the whiteness of the fat," he says.

Only a man with a passion for good meat could say that.

Consumers ignored at coffee talks

NEW YORK (UPI) — The State Dept. buckled under the influence of the U.S. coffee industry and sacrificed consumer interests at the 1975 negotiations of the International Coffee Agreement, a Brooklyn congressman charged Friday.

Rep. Fred Richmond said State and Treasury Dept. documents show the U.S. delegation to the 1975 talks, which rejected such consumer protection measures as a price ceiling for coffee and buffer stocks, was "totally devoid of consumer representation."

The creation of an international buffer stock would have kept coffee at between $1.69 and $1.89 a pound for Americans, whose consumption dropped by 38 per cent after coffee went above $4 a pound early this year, Richmond said.

THE STATE DEPT. documents reveal the U.S. delegation, recommended by the National Coffee Assn., was dominated by the largest commodity brokers, coffee traders and coffee roasters in the nation. The Brooklyn Democrat told a news conference here.

Richmond accused the State Dept. of ignoring conflict of interest questions raised by the presence of coffee industry advisers at the 1975 coffee talks and said he has asked the Civil Service Commission to "give a final opinion" on the Department's collusion with the coffee industry.

"There was no U.S. consumer representation at the talks, in violation of regulations governing international commodity agreements," Richmond said. "Many consumer representatives and economists should have been invited, not only coffee speculators and manufacturers."

Richmond, chairman of the House Agriculture Subcommittee on Domestic Marketing, Consumer Relations and Nutrition, also said he will ask the Senate to cancel U.S. participation in the International Coffee Agreement when it comes up for extension in Sept. 1978.

He has asked the General Accounting Office to investigate international commodity agreements covering wheat, cocoa and sugar for similar conflicts of interest.

Gold gathers no dust as dollar ails

Louis Rukeyser

For millenia it has exercised a unique command over the mind, libido and avarice of man. Civilizations long departed still send us their souvenirs in gold; we know them now for what they did with it then, which was almost anything — except ignore it.

Now it is back in the news again, glittering boldly despite the desire of the U.S. government and most of its counterparts to keep it inconspicuous. For this is an investment like none other; to the true believer, investing in gold is indeed a form of religion. The credo (which many an evangelist would recognize) is that our civilization is doomed by its own moral corrpution; the commandment, though, is not to say a prayer but to buy gold.

It just refused to go away. A nation whose citizens prized their freedom could not forever tolerate so unjustifiable a prohibition. One way or another, legally, quasilegally and otherwise, many Americans began nibbling at this forbidden fruit of finance. If the Government was that anxious to keep them from buying gold, many reasoned, gold had to be an unusually attractive investment.

Must the advocates of gold be correct in their forecasts of eventual doom for all else, success for them? Certainly not. Human beings have the capacity to take control of their destinies. We can contain the debilitating inflation, we can restrain our economy-wrecking politicians. Which is not to say we will.

But even if the Cassandras should be right, there is not guarantee that owning gold would assure salvation or security amid chaos and destruction. The golden rule for the economy is to solve its problems, rather than seek gold-plated escape hatches. If we adopt that rule, we might find the one possibility the "gold bugs" habitually overlook: something might actually go right.

Spending deficit less than forecast

The Carter administration, in an optimistic appraisal, estimated Friday the fiscal 1978 federal spending deficit will be $3 billion below its previous forecast. "This is good news," said acting budget director James McIntyre of the now predicted $58.4 billion gap between government income and spending in the year ending next Sept. 30. "It is aslo more realistic." McIntyre, who took over as the administration's temporary budget director Sept. 21 following the resignation of Bert Lance, also estimated the budget deficit for fiscal 1979 would be "in the neighborhood of $40 billion." That figure is somewhat higher than administration forecasts made in July.

New tax package will be 'simple'

Treasury Sec. Michael Blumenthal Friday said the administration's tax package going to Congress next year should be "relatively simple," stressing tax cuts for individuals and business over complicated reform measures. Blumenthal also offered another apparent administration endorsement of the monetary policies of chairman Arthur Burns of the Federal Reserve Board, saying the administration is not at odds with him. "I'm satisfied that he has been about right" in his economic philosophy, Blumenthal said. "I'm confident he will support the recovery. I have no doubt he will adjust if he sees the economy going downhill."

Some autos meet mileage goal

Seven domestic and foreign auto manufacturers are selling or producing 1978 model fleets that will meet the newly required mileage average of 18 miles per gallon, the Environmental Protection Agency reported Friday. Of those submitting figures to the agency, only Chrysler Corp. does not meet the standard now, with an average of 17.8 MPG for its full line of new models. The EPA said it expects the company will meet the requirement when it introduces its new small cars, the Omni and the Horizon. The nation's biggest car manufacturer, General Motors, has yet to submit sufficient data for the EPA to make a calculation, the agency said. Domestic new-car inventories, drained by fast sales of 1978 models, dropped sharply to a 49-day supply, the trade publication Automotive News said Friday. As of Nov. 1, the publication said, companies had 1.6 million cars in stock. At the beginning of October, inventories amounted to a 61-day supply. The latest figures were considered balanced for the industry, although shortages and oversupplies were found for specific nameplates. General Motors announced Friday plans to discontinue production of luxury motor homes and similar multipurpose vehicles and convert plants involved to expanded truck operations.

EPA recalls 160,000 Datsuns

The Environmental Protection Agency Friday announced the recall of about 160,000 Datsuns with allegedly faulty exhaust control systems. Involved are 1977 model Datsun B210, F10, 810, 710, 200SX and 280Z cars built prior to Feb. 1, 1977. "The defect involves a braze joint which may break and result in an exhaust leak and deactivation of the exhaust gas recirculation system," the agency said. "The leak could cause oxides and deactivation of nitrogen emissions to exceed applicable federal air pollution standards." The EPA said the recall, which is being conducted by Datsun, is the first under a new system in which car manufacturers must notify EPA of exhaust-related defects.

Interest rates likely to increase

by ROBERT EDWARDS

In your opinion will interest rates 6 to 10 years from now be higher or lower? In general do most corporations redeem bonds prior to maturity date?—E.L.Z.

I expect interest rates to go upward for as long as the U.S. monetary and fiscal policies favor inflation. Continued sizable deficits and expanding money supplies to monetize a portion of those deficits wind through the system to produce inflation. Interest rates comprise an inflation bias plus a true rental rate for money. Thus, as inflation spirals upward, interest rates also will increase.

Companies with bonds outstanding redeem them when new money is cheaper than old money. That is, if a company can borrow money by issuing new bonds at lower interest rates than they are paying on outstanding bonds, they will use the new money to redeem the old, high-interest bonds. Some bonds may not be redeemed early at any price; they are non-callable. Others may be called after a noncallable period for early redemption on a random basis or by paying a premium price. Conditions vary widely, but generally companies redeem bonds early when it is advantageous for them to do so.

In answer to a previous query, you stated that Series E Savings Bonds carry 6 per cent interest. I was told by the bank that the base on which interest is paid on E-bonds increases every 10 years, so in effect this would increase the interest paid. Is this correct? — D.G.

No, interest on E-bonds accrues as an increase in the redemption value. Each 6 months, the interest is paid on the balance; that is, the base on which the interest is paid increases by the amount of the previous interest. Thus, the rate is compounded twice yearly. However, from original purchase to maturity in 5 years, the rate of interest varies to yield an average of 6 per cent over the 5-year period. After maturity, the rate is a steady 6 per cent and the base increases with each addition to redemption value — not every 10 years.

I am 65 years old and expect a pension when I retire. I own no real estate, and my income from all sources totals $26,000. After I retire, I expect an income of about $8,250 from my pension and social security benefits. Savings and other investments will add more income. My problem — how can I reduce current tax payments? You mentioned a tax-exempt investment that I might consider. — R.H.

You are entitled to another exemption after 65, which will reduce your taxes some. I hesitate to suggest investing in real estate now. However, you could convert a portion of your savings now in a passbook savings account to tax-free bonds or a tax-free bond mutual fund — there are several. In your 40-45 per cent tax bracket, a 4½ per cent tax-free return would equal about 8 per cent taxable return.

I am 72 and my estate is in a living trust. I own a farm in Iowa but live in California, and the farm is worked on shares. The farm is worth 10 times what we paid for it in the 1930s, and I would like my three children to share it — and hopefully, keep it in the family. But, how can they pay the taxes due within 9 months of my death without having to sell the farm? — Mrs. W. C. B.

Inflated value of farms was causing many problems similar to yours, and Congress passed two amendments to the income tax code to relieve such situations. (1) The executor may elect a special valuation for a farm rather than highest and best use if certain conditions are met. It appears, however, that since neither you or a member of your family materially participated in the operation of the farm, you would not qualify for this election. (2) Taxes on the land may be paid over a 10-or 15-year period depending on the percentage of the estate attributable to the farm. It appears that you would qualify for this deferral and your heirs could pay whatever taxes are due over a much longer period than the 9 months you note. Considerably more information is needed to be sure; I suggest you contact a CPA and review all of the facts.

I am forced to belong to our state's pension plan. However, we must pay income tax on the money set aside in our pension plan. Why is this money not deductible — in the same way as an Individual Retirement Account? — Mrs. L. K.

Without knowing the details of your state's plan, I can only comment that not all pension plans are eligible for pretax dollar funding. Insurance and some annuity plans require payments in before-tax dollars. Your state's plan is probably a combination with a part of the contributions coming from the state as nontaxable income and the remainder your after-tax income. When you begin drawing on these funds after retirement, the tables are turned; that is, you pay tax on the income you receive from the state's contribution, and you do not pay tax on the funds attributable to your contribution. Ordinarily, it is desirable to set aside tax-deferred dollars while you are employed and pay taxes on the income after retirement because you are likely to be in a lower tax bracket. Sometimes, possibly in your case, there may be little reason for the policy — but it is the policy.

Own investments may be better than social security funds: expert

by LeROY POPE

UPI Business Writer

NEW YORK — If a young person took the money he pays Social Security and invested it reasonably and conscientiously, he would amass more savings for retiremement than the government program provides.

This is the contention of Arthur Milton, an insurance expert and investment advisor. Many young persons suspect he is right. That is just one of the reasons they are deeply concerned about the future of the Social Security system.

"I wouldn't venture a guess at just how much better a person could do without Social Security," Milton said. "It's too complex an actuarial problem and too dependent on one's intelligence and self-discipline.

"We have to recognize that, while Social Security is good for many persons, the system today is a far cry from what was envisioned when it was adopted in the 1930's.

"It was intended as a minimal base security plan and it has evolved into a tax burden that sops up the bulk of anything most persons possibly can save during their lives," he said.

MILTON, AUTHOR of "Will Inflation Destroy America?," denounced the higher Social Security tax schedule just passed by the House of Representatives as being severely inflationary. He said the higher taxes are sure to wreck many small businesses.

"Social Security also has become inflationary because of the many frauds perpetrated against it," he said.

"The Social Security system is burdened with the huge cost of these frauds and illegitimate claims and that throws the system out of actuarial kilter.

"People think nothing of filing illegitimate claims for Social Security benefits because the taxpayers have to pay," he said. "But if I am funding my own savings and insurance plan, I will be much more concerned about people filing illegitimate claims because that will run my premium rates up and could wreck the whole plan."

John R. Van Wagoner, production manager for the life, health and financial services division of the Travelers' Insurance Group, agreed that a young person could do better than Social Security by investing the same amount that he pays in taxes in life insurance, annuities and similar investments.

"Our company's experience is that investors in our insurance savings plans get a six per cent return on their money fairly consistently," Van Wagoner said.

But like Milton, he declined to predict exactly how much better one can do privately than Social Security does.

AMERICANS ARE deeply concerned about the possibility of the Social Security system going broke but most of them are opposed vigorously to paying higher payroll taxes to bail the system out.

That is why the House of Representatives voted on Oct. 27 to raise Social Security taxes sharply only on the wages of those who make more than $20,000 per year.

The House also voted gradually to eliminate the $3,000 limit on earnings of Social Security recipients younger than 72. The House killed a proposal to put civil servants in the Social Security system.

The Gallagher presidents' report said recently almost 72 per cent of the corporate presidents expected the present system to go broke.

Four-fifths of the presidents asked said they favored overhauling Social Security to permit workers to credit their own and the employers' contributions to their own personal accounts for retirement purposes, an idea that wasn't exactly blueprinted.

The degree of opposition to higher payroll taxes is exceeded only by the general malaise of many Americans about Social Security, says Prof. Carl W. Eldred of the University of South Carolina in a detailed study of public attitudes on Social Security published in the Journal of Risk Insurance.

PROFESSOR ELDRED proceeds from the viewpoint that Social Security must have widespread public support if it is to keep working satisfactorily.

He found that 36 per cent of the persons he surveyed would approve abolishing Social Security on the theory that private insurance plans can do better. A majority said they did not believe the system as presently set up is financially sound in the long run.

But when Eldred asked if the Social Security tax rate should be raised to finance a stronger system or if the wage base for the tax should be lifted to provide more money for benefits, the resposse was overwhelmingly negative.

ELDRED'S SURVEY went into other aspects of public attitudes towards Social Security, such as whether benefits should continue to be tied to earnings or should be based on the need of the beneficiaries. The respondents were overwhelmingly in favor of continuing to base benefits on the worker's past earnings.

This, however, could be the $64 question for Congress concerning the future of Social Security as the American population ages and the needs of the elderly expand.

President Carter proposed phasing out the present $16,500-a-year limit on the Social Security tax wage base and requiring employers to collect taxes on total wages by 1981. He also proposed gradually stepping up the tax rates. But the President's plan upset business, particularly small business.

Reassurance from Carter causes surge in the stocks

NEW YORK (UPI) — Stocks, aided by the heaviest trading since July, broke out of a 10-month slide with their best gain in 22 months this week as President Carter supported Federal Reserve Chairman Arthur F. Burns and the Fed eased credit.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average, which lost 12.74 points last week, soared 35.95 points to 845.89, the sharpest rise since a 52.42-point runup in the period ended Jan. 9, 1976.

The Dow's 27.46-point advance Thursday and Friday was the biggest since a 27.81-point surge Feb. 19-20, 1976. Thursday's 14.12-point advance was the best since it climbed 15.95 on Oct. 13, 1976.

The New York Stock Exchange common stock index rose 2.43 to 52.70 and Standard & Poor's 500-stock index, containing some over-the-counter issues, jumped 4.40 to 95.98.

ADVANCES ROUTED declines, 1,648 to 265, among the 2,081 issues crossing the composite tape.

Brokers cheered at the NYSE volume total of 129,054,540 shares, the heaviest since 138.2 million changed hands the week ended July 22. This week's turnover compared with 94,790,280 last week and 83,411,070 during the same week a year ago. Friday's 35.2 million-share turnover was the heaviest since 44.5 million were traded Feb. 20, 1976, the busiest day in NYSE history.

Composite volume of NYSE issues listed on all U.S. exchanges and over the counter totaled 147,653,730 shares, compared with 110,141,570 last week.

As the week started, analysts felt the oversold market was ripe for a rally. It just needed a good piece of news. Observers noted in the first 10 months of the year, the Dow average had fallen more than 200 points to a two-year low, leaving blue-chip issues at rock-bottom prices.

Carter triggered the surge when he told reporters Thursday morning he did not have major differences with Burns and that he wouldn't want to change the basic structure of the Fed.

Dow up 13.34, ends best week in 22 months

NEW YORK (UPI) — The stock market, closing out its best week in 22 months, climbed sharply Friday in the heaviest trading in more than a year as investors hailed the apparent end of credit tightening by the Federal Reserve Board.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which soared 14.12 points Thursday, climbed another 13.34 points to 845.89 and finished the week with a gain of 35.95 points.

That was the best weekly advance since the 52.42-point runup in the period ended Jan. 9, 1976. The two-day rise of 27.46 points was the best since a 27.81-point climb on Feb. 19 and 20, 1976.

The sharpness and breath of the two-day rally represented a temporary breakout of a 10-month slide in which the Dow average hed skidded more than 200 points, or 20 per cent.

The New York Stock Exchange volume of 35,260,000 shares, up from the 31,980,000 traded Thursday, was the heaviest since 44,512,860 shares changed hands Feb. 20, 1976, the busiest session in NYSE history.

The first-hour volume of 11,160,000 was the third heaviest in NYSE history. The heaviest first hour was 13,000,000 shares on Feb. 20, 1976 and the second was 12,100,000 on Jan. 30, 1976.

A prime factor in Friday's surge was the FED's report late Thursday that the nation's basic money supply plunged $3.4 billion in the latest reporting week. This would make it easier for the Fed to ease credit.

Investors also hailed signs of a softening in the Carter administration's dealing with the Fed and Chairman Arthur F. Burns. President Carter triggered Thursday's rally when he said he had no major differences with Burns.

Treasury Sec. W. Michael Blumenthal told the Senate Banking Committee early Friday the Fed's policies have been "about right" in keeping a lid on inflation while allowing the economy to expand.

As a result, the NYSE common stock index rose 0.69 to 52.70 and the average price of a share gained 40 cents.

Advances routed declines, 1,214 to 317, among the 1,857 issues crossing the composite tape at 3 p.m.

Shop for car loan before you buy

A few phone calls made before starting your search for a new car could mean hundreds of dollars in savings on a car loan, the Chicago Motor Club advises.

Interest rates on new car loans vary from an average annual percentage rate of 13.2 per cent for loans offered by car dealers to 10.8 per cent with credit unions, the motor club reports.

A random survey of Northwest suburban banks shows rates varying from a 9.31 per cent to 10.64 per cent annual interest rate.

Each additional point of interest translates into hundreds of dollars over the life of the loan.

ANOTHER SOURCE of auto loans in Illinois is the Allstate Insurance Co. which offers new car loans at an annual percentage rate of 10.75 per cent for a 36-month loan.

While credit unions generally offer the best loan terms because they are owned cooperatively by their members, nonmembers cannot get a car loan from them legally, said Con O'Mahoney, a research specialist with the Illinois Credit Union League.

The majority of Illinois' 1,500 credit unions have been formed by workers at various companies, O'Mahoney said. If a person's company doesn't already have a credit union at his place of business, "it's very difficult to find one," he said.

People should check with fraternal, professional or religious groups they are members of to see if those groups have their own credit unions, O'Mahoney said.

The motor club advises new car buyers to secure a loan before starting their car search.

"WITH CASH OR loan commitment in hand, you can more readily bargain over price and take advantage of sales. The dealer may offer a convenient financing method, but it will tend to be more expensive," a club spokesman said.

Buyers also should take note of loan durations and down payment requirements by lenders they approach for information. Such factors affect the over-all cost of the loan.

Savings and loan associations generally do not offer auto loans because of legal restrictions, a spokesman for the United States League of Savings Associations said.

Most banks in this area will provide loan information on the telephone. Banks and a savings association contacted by The Daily Herald and their loan terms are:

- Suburban National Bank of Woodfield — 10.2 per cent annual percentage rate; longest loan available, 36 months; 20 per cent down payment required.
- Unity Savings, Schaumburg — 10.4 per cent for noncustomers, 9.76 for its savers; longest loan available, 36 months; 25 per cent down payment required.
- First National Bank of Mount Prospect: 9.76 per cent; 42-month loans available; 20 per cent down payment required.
- Palatine National Bank: 10.2 per cent; 36-month loans longest available; 20 per cent down payment required.
- Suburban National Bank of Elk Grove: 10.6 per cent; 36-months longest term available; 20 per cent down payment required.
- The Bank of Palatine: 10.2 per cent; 36 months longest term available; 20 per cent down payment required.
- Countryside Bank, Mount Prospect: 10.2 per cent; 36 months longest term available; 20 per cent down payment required.
- Des Plaines Bank: 9.31 per cent; 36 months longest term available; 25 per cent down payment required.

Steel chief blames layoffs on imports

CHICAGO (UPI) — The president of United States Steel Corp. said Friday steel workers laid off at the Chicago South Works probably would be working again if foreign steel imports were curtailed by the federal government.

Some 350 of the 3,500 workers normally employed at South Works have been laid off because of a decrease in production. Steel officials blame the decrease on foreign imports.

Old soldier gets new Purple Heart

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (UPI) — Herbert D. Crothers finally got his Purple Heart Friday for being wounded in World War I.

The spry, 81-year-old retired utility worker was honored 59 years after being gassed in France. But it took three years and the prodding of a congressman before the Army recognized his right to the medal.

Crothers stood at attention in a cold, blustery wind as Rep. Harold Sayer, R-Mich., made the belated presentation and apologized for the Army's forgetfulness.

"IT'S ALMOST as if it had been sent in the U.S. Mail," said Sawyer.

"I do appreciate receiving the medal," Crothers told the 30 people who gathered for the Veteran's Day ceremony. "I'm going to keep it."

Crothers said there was little to remember about the injury on Aug. 29, 1918, at the Battle of Juvigny.

"I had been on the front four days when it happened," recalled Crothers, who was a sergeant of M Company, 126th Infantry, 32nd Division. "We were advancing on the enemy through the woods and the next thing I knew I was in the hospital."

CROTHERS SAID he never thought much about getting the Purple Heart, "because I was just glad I got out of it alive. We lost 70 men in our company."

The dead included his brother, Gordon M. Crothers, who was killed at Chateau Thierry Aug. 2, 1918.

Crothers always figured he was eligible for the medal, but didn't do anything about it until 1974, "when I heard about the boys from Vietnam who were getting their Purple Hearts late." He wrote the Army but was told there was no record he had even served.

When he asked Sawyer for help, the congressman turned up Crother's military records. However, the Army stuck to the book and insisted Crothers had to prove he was attacked by German mustard gas and not something else.

"I didn't get a chance to ask the enemy what kind of gas it was," Crothers said. "That's like asking the Germans what kind of bullets they were using."

The Army eventually relented and okayed the Purple Heart.

Editor's note . . .

Most stories written on the circus feature the main attraction, the lion tamer, the flyers, even the clowns. Toni Ginnetti, a consumate circus lover, took a different tact. She talked with probably the most important man in the wings — John Herriot, the person who keeps things running. Page 4.

Go ahead. Admit it. Don't say you watch the Muppets' television program "for the kids." Don't say you only sit with junior during Sesame Street "for his sake." There's nothing to be ashamed of. Jim Henson has designed the Muppets as much for adults as children. In fact, when the furry little beasts were first created fourteen years ago Henson used them to mouth opinions on social and political issues. Even today they carry social messages to their fans. But more important they carry laughter. And that, more than anything else, is what endears them to the masses. Page 6.

If you're a regular reader of Travel Editor Katherine Rodeghier you've found her stories to be an accurate reflection of the places she visits. Not everything is wonderful in every country tourists visit. Colombia is an example. She calls it a land of contradictions and presents the beauty and the beast of this South American country on page 10.

KEEPING THE GREATEST SHOW ON EARTH ROLLING

That's John Herriot's job. He's the man with the stopwatch who gets acts on and off stage at the proper moment, and watches over the hundreds of performers — human and animal — that make a living under the Big Top.

by Toni Ginnetti

An hour to show time.

Already the vendors are infecting the air with the tantalizing aroma of popcorn. Robed performers are donning the magic paint of clowns. Acrobats are handstanding and stretching to loosen muscles. The big cats are starting to pace.

Three hundred humans and 200 animals of Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus...readying.

Only John Herriot has yet to arrive.

This isn't like him, the others say. The 46-year-old performance director "lives by his watch."

"Once the whistle blows for the show to start, you can set your watch by him," they say. "Once the show starts, he's in complete control."

Timing is Herriot's business. From opening parade to grand finale, from drum roll to crashing cymbals at the moment of a spectacular trapeze feat, the precision of The Greatest Show On Earth is tuned to the digital watch and experienced eye of the mustachioed, debonair circus veteran.

But the minutes are ticking away at the International Amphitheatre in Chicago, and Herriot is strangely tardy.

It is with 30 minutes left that the master finally appears.

It seems the merriment of a birthday party last night for an Hungarian teeterboard balancer lingered a bit unpleasantly this morning for Herriot.

(Yes, Virginia, circus people are human.)

But if grace under pressure is the gauge of a pro, this man is among the best.

For even now, with the clowns beginning the opening routines and the audience settling into seats, John Herriot — coffee cup in hand and 15 minutes to mark — has the situation totally in his grasp.

"The machinery should be oiled well enough that it can all function. Right now it's important that everyone is here."

"The important thing with any of the animals is that they drink water this morning," he adds. Rarely is there a problem with the animals, but that is the kind of potential crisis for which the performance director must be prepared to compensate.

"We can make an adjustment in the show in a matter of seconds," he says, taking in the scene of the final moments.

Ten minutes to show time and Herriot, amiable and accommodating, still is conversing almost leisurely about the spectacle soon to start. Politely he excuses himself to change into his tuxedo.

Five minutes to show time and he emerges backstage, rapping his hands and shouting a chorus of "five minutes!" to the sequin-costumed, plume-feathered array of performers and nearby band members.

Watching for Herriot's cue is his lone assistant, Theo Schmitz. Their watches are said to be synchronized within five seconds of each other.

And then the whistle that starts the show.

Herriot seems almost lost in the dazzle of parading elephants, glittering show girls, elaborate props and the strutting stars. Yet he commands the entrance, directing the entire display with a gesture, a nod, a clap.

The performance settles into its schedule and Herriot into the wings, with an eye to the show and an ear to his workers.

The show girl captain nears to tell him who is here and who is ill, whose mother needs tickets for the weekend performance and who has a dentist appointment next Tuesday.

"If she has a problem with one of the girls, I'll let her handle it at her level if she can. We have a boss clown, too." he says. Still, handling the performers both in the ring and out ultimately is Herriot's responsibility.

"Handling the temperaments of the people is the most difficult thing. People come to me with problems even I can't solve. But they come to me for reassurance.

"If I hear there's a rumble in Clown Alley, I have to concern myself with that. And if I ball out someone and it's the wrong person, that's bad, too.

"I'm dealing with all kinds of temperaments and even nationalities. But, look, I was with the Hungarians and Bulgarians last night and I'm their boss, but we had a great time. That's what makes my job."

Diplomacy is a necessity for a performance director. So is resourcefulness.

"One time we were appearing on the 100th anniversary of The Greatest Show On Earth in Madison Square Garden. There was a railroad strike going on in New York and they were unable to move our train into the city. They parked the train in Elizabeth, N.J., about 20 miles away.

"We got the animals in and kept them there and we had all the people live back on the circus train. They arranged for a commuter train to pick up all the performers every day at an old depot stop.

"Everyday on this little landing in New Jersey we'd be standing there, 300 of us, and I always wondered, 'What if this train didn't stop?' Well the manager had never advised them that the show had different performance times, and one day the train didn't stop.

"We had an 11 a.m. performance and 17,000 people in the seats and nobody there. Well, I had gotten there before and the elephant trainer and the lion trainer were there and the elephants and lions were there. We couldn't cancel it, so I wrote out a program on the back of an envelope and posted it and told the band to start playing the opening music.

"I was hoping clear heads would prevail and they would eventually get the performers there. Well, about 50 minutes into the show, the doors of a freight elevator opened and inside a hundred people came running out making a mad dash for the dressing rooms.

"We made it and nobody ever knew."

The show is proceeding flawlessly now before a delighted Friday morning audience dominated by children. John Herriot seems to be relaxing, hard at work.

"It takes crazy people to be performance directors," he smiles.

Circus people have a knack for theatrics. It shows in a former horse trainer-turned performance director who married his wife in the center ring of the Will Rogers Stadium in Texas during intermission on Thanksgiving Day, 1954.

But then, it's probably to be expected from someone who's life has always been the realm of the Big Top.

"I was born and raised in Minnesota,"

John Herriot waits in the wings with one of the circus' taller clowns.

THE CIRCUS

For children of all ages
Down thru the years
A century and more
Of laughter and of cheers

From a humble beginning
In a village town square
To eminence and parlance
In the entertainment sphere.

It brings that magic of joy
All throughout the land
Whenever it may stop
By the people's command.

What is this grant
Of thrill and laughter
That leaves fond memories
Forever after?

It's elephants and clowns
And Acrobat's feat.
The man on the flying
Trapeze a treat

The brass of the band
The ringmaster so neat
The beautiful horses
With thundering feet

The few hours spent
In happiness complete.

But its work is not easy,
It fights for its life.
Its history is clouded
With many moments of strife.

Thru fire and floor
And famine and war
It never is stopped
By these challenges and more.

Big Bertha it is called
All thru these years
By the people that love it
Thru good times and tears.

It moves across the land
A giant caterpillar on rails
No boundaries can contain it
Along its many trails.

All cities it has visited
For over a century.
Some more remembered
Whatever the reason may be.

Each city has a tale
To tell about the circus
Some good, some bad
Some that could even hurt us.

But the people who command it
And are familiar with its worth
Have always insisted it be
The Greatest Show on Earth.

So appearing in your city
Each year twice daily,
It's Ringling Bros. and Barnum and Bailey.

Story by Diane Mermigas

The Muppets, those lovable creatures that invade your home via television and capture your heart, are the creation of Mississippi native Jim Henson, who started with a green frog named Kermit in his college days and now oversees a multi-million dollar puppeteering empire.

Jim Henson's self-imposed

Milton Berle couln't wait to get into his clown makeup and oversized shoes to do his "Top Banana" sketch with Fozzie Bear.

Actress Rita Moreno walked away with an Emmy Award this year for her "outstanding, single performance" in the regular "Muppet Show" series.

Crew members of the British aircraft carrier HMS Hermes are wearing little badges on their flight deck uniforms that sport not Her Majesty's laurel leaf but a portrait of Kermit the Frog.

And, Dwight White, the big bruiser of a defense end for the Pittsburgh Steelers, reportedly carries around a Kermit the Frog doll wherever he goes.

It seems the entire adult world has gone mad with Muppetmania, leaving the kiddie population bewildered and leaving the Muppets' creator Jim Henson a very wealthy, yet humble man.

What began twenty-one years ago as amateur puppeteer Henson's peculiar cross between a puppet and a marionette, embodied in none other than that silly little Kermit the Frog, has mushroomed into a multi-million-dollar empire that covers the globe with television shows, records and a product line that includes everything from puppets to T-shirts.

It all started with Kermit.

It's not kid's play. It's big business. But the man behind the Muppets phenomenon is as warm and gentle as they come in show business and knows how it feels to be striding against the TV industry's turbulent winds. The path is still not an easy one for Henson, but it's certainly starting to pay off.

"Puppets are funny things," Henson says in a soft-spoken manner from the Upper East Side Manhattan offices of Henson Associates. "They seem to win the hearts of both small and grown-up kids, but the networks have never been eager to buy it."

It seems hard to believe that a man who largely contributes to the lasting prosperity of the Public Broadcasting System's "Sesame Street" with a mainstay of Muppet characters, is enjoying an unbelievable popularity in the second season of his "Muppets Show" which is syndicated in 163 cities and 103 countries across the world, and can barely keep up with a growing demand for Muppet recordings and products is having problems selling a one-hour Muppets special, "Emmet Otter's Jug Band Christmas" to the networks.

"The problem isn't the show because it's really one of the best things we've done. It's the industry. It isn't easy. There are only three networks buying in the marketplace and if one doesn't like it, none of them seem to want to pick it up. If it gets on the air just once, it will be a hit, I know it. But, the special is probably a little too gentle for modern day television. That's one of the frustrations of the business."

That kind of frustration isn't new to Henson, but he has never allowed it to get in his way.

"I guess you could say that mine has been somewhat of a fairytale story. It's been a long career with a steady and slow increase in fame and prosperity. It has really been very gratifying with no real surprises," said the 41-year-old Henson.

Henson was studying design art at the University of Maryland when he and his future wife, Jane Nebel, brainstormed a five-minute puppet show for local Washington television called "Sam and Friends."

Henson designed several "simple, crude puppets" for the project, one of which was the first and now oldest Muppet, Kermit the Frog. The show, geared toward Henson's college-age peer group, was a unique blend of puppetry and social and political commentary.

Henson's Muppets today have retained a very human-like nature and continue to deliver a mix of entertainment, messages about life and satirical commentary.

"I never played with puppets as a child, but it was a chance to work on television and I guess, maybe, there was a little boy inside of me that came out of hiding during the creative process," said the Greenville, Miss., native.

A few appearances on what was then Steve Allen's "Tonight Show" gave way to regular appearance on the Ed Sullivan show for five seasons.

When Rowlf the Dog became one of the most popular residents of "The Jimmy Dean Show" for three seasons, Henson temporarily spun off in a different direction writing, directing and starring in a short, non-puppet experiment film, "Timepiece." The 1965 project received an Academy Award nomination and several international awards.

Although his solo performance was a success, Henson knew then that there was just no working without his Muppet creations.

In 1970, his Muppets became the staple of "Sesame Street" and a handful of Henson specials earned him two Emmy Awards. In a less successful venture, the Muppets became regulars for a while on NBC's "'Saturday Night Live."

As the ensemble of wild-looking, motley, fuzzy Muppets grew, Henson was able to realize his fondest dream, and in 1976 his own show went on the air.

Henson has created some 500 Muppets, some of which have been retired but most of which hang in neat rows in the Muppet Workshop at the ATV Studios at Elstree, England, where the "Muppets Show" is produced for world-wide syndication.

The workshop, just outside London, is where 200 of those Muppets regularly used for the "Muppets Show" are clothed, cleaned and maintained during the production of the 24 half-hour episodes of the show seen in Chicago Saturdays at 6:30 p.m. on Channel 2.

The Muppets are grouped in categories and carefully indexed so that they can easily be put away and found. But, because they have all the appeal of any cuddly toy, even to those who work on them regularly, colorful signs posted throughout the workshop read, "Please do not fondle, molest, handle, touch or tweak the puppets."

The creation and maintenance of Muppets has long surpassed one man's time and trouble and Henson now has teams of puppeters and workers in the organization.

A crew of art directors, puppeteers and puppet builders normally collaborate in the operation's New York offices to create new Muppets when they are needed.

Fozzie

Out of some fifteen basic types, an indefinite number of Muppets can be created by the mere switching, and mixing and matching of parts.

There are one-man Muppets operated with one hand in the puppet's mouth and the other free to move the puppet's arms.

There are two-man Muppets where a second man helps to move the puppet's arms and any props, and a third kind of Muppet, like Big Bird on "Sesame Street,"

that is actually inhabited by its puppeteer.

On top of all that, there may be several dozen renderings of just one Muppet that are adaptable to different situations. For instance, there are more than a dozen different Kermit the Frog puppets, one of which contains an intricate mechanism that allows the frog to cross his legs and another that may have him costumed differently.

"There is just no end to what you can do with puppets today. The Muppets emerged during a time when the materials available for the building of puppets were more varied than they were in the past."

"I created my first Muppet; Kermit the Frog, with cloth and fur fabrics. Now we work with foam and all sorts of man-made products that allow us to do more creative things," Henson said.

Unlike the oldtime puppets, Henson's Muppets have always been designed specifically for close-up work on television. The mouths move, the detail is greater and the gestures don't need to be as broad as for audiences seated far away.

"The creation of a new Muppet usually starts with a need for a particular kind of personality on the show. With Fozzie Bear, for instance, we knew we wanted to have a stand-up comedian. We had in mind a Red Skelton type of character that was a bundle of anxieties off-stage and a gung-ho storyteller up front."

"We worked out several drawings and then turned it over to the builders. We rebuilt him several times, feeling out different things like mechanical ears that would wiggle, different colors for his fur and even different voices until we were happy with what we had."

As is the case with people, the personality of Muppets must evolve gradually. There are growth periods when the puppet is developed step by step and, in the process, must be matched with just the right puppeteer. "That is very important," Henson said.

What most observors easily forget is that beneath that platform on which the Muppets always perform is a perspiring, hustling, ingenius puppeteer.

Sometimes they strap tiny, portable television sets to their chests in order to see what is taking place above them. Wires, cables, scripts and up to eight puppeteers share the cramped work space beneath the platform during show time.

Waldorf

Henson operates Kermit the Frog, Rowlf, Waldorf, the Swedish Chef, Dr. Teeth, Ernie and other of the Muppets. Thirty-three-year-old Frank Oz, who Henson says is largely responsible for the Muppets' humor and is his right-hand-man, performs Miss Piggy, Fozzie Bear, Animal and Sam the Eagle on the "Muppet Show" and performs Grover, Bert and Cookie Monster on "Sesame Street."

Another would-be actor and key Henson puppeteer is Jerry Nelson who is Floyd Pepper, Robin, Fleet Scribbler, Crazy Harry and Uncle Deadly on the "Muppets Show" and the Count, Herry Monster and Sherlock Hemlock on "Sesame Street."

The voices of Scooter and Beaker are provided by Richard Hunt, and the Great Gonzo and Zoot are really the closet performances of Dave Goelz. Henson, five other puppeteers and three writers alternate between the Muppet appearances on both "Sesame Street" and "The Muppet Show" in what is demanding, highly skilled work in a nearly lost ancient art form.

"I know that the Muppets have managed to popularize puppetry, especially on television, all over the world. There is more interest in puppets now than in recent years," Henson said. "Celebrities compete to get on the show even though we produce it in England and over in that country, people are buying Muppets products like crazy."

Under special licensing arrangements between Henson and the English-based television firm that distributes "The Muppets Show," manufacturers are now turning out from books, records, toys, games, dolls, bubble bath and clothes a la Muppet in the same manner they did for "Sesame Street."

In what has become a prestigious jaunt to London for taping of "The Muppets Show," entertainers like George Burns, Madeline Kahn, Elton John, Bernadette Peters, Peter Sellers, Nancy Walker, Milton Berle, Don Knotts, Dom DeLuise, Cloris Leachman, Judy Collins, Petula Clark and Monty Python's John Cleese have taken turns at guest hosting "The Muppet Show" segments this season.

Dr. Teeth

"We offer them a chance to work in sort of a fun land, a never-never land," Henson said. "And the stars seem to establish a natural sort of relationship with the Muppets right away."

After all, where else could Madeline Kahn fend off the attentions of the crooked-nosed Gonzo the Great? Where else could Don Knotts play bass fiddle in a rendition of "Lullaby of Birdland," backed by Dr. Teeth and the Electric Mayhem Band of Muppets?

And if you think that's bad, couple with the fact that the seamen of England's Royal Navy have adopted Kermit the Frog as their mascot, then you ought to hear about the fan mail that the Muppets get by the bagfuls each week.

The letters offer jokes for Fozzie, suggestions on how Kermit can better contend with Miss Piggy's romantic overtures, ideas for new Muppets, and requests for autographed pictures.

Although the Muppets are heard in many tongues throughout the world, the reaction to them is the same everywhere, Henson said.

Seriously, how can you resist a Muppet?

The bulgy-eyed, impudent Kermit the Frog is wittily urbane one minute and silly the next. He's the perfect host of "The Muppet Show" and a straight man for the rest of the puppet troupe.

Resident comedian Fozzie Bear is likable, charming and insecure. Statler and Waldorf are the two old codgers who sit in the theater's box seats during the show making wisecracks.

Gonzo the Great is the sorry talent director who fails time after time with dancing cheese or eating a rubber tire to "The Flight of the Bumble Bee."

The big shaggy dog Rowlf sings and plays piano while the brash, young theater hand, Scooter, spills coffee and fetches sandwiches for the puppet cast of "The Muppets Show."

Dr. Teeth is director of the Electric Mayhem rock band and Miss Piggy, in satin gown with manicured hooves, is madly in love with Kermit the Frog and is always sticking her snout into everyone's business. She is also the star of a new feature on the "The Muppet Show," a continuing science fiction series called "Swine Trek."

There are dozens more Muppet regulars on "Sesame Street" and an endless number of special appearance puppets that Henson and his group make use of.

Yet, the master's secret favorite remains that first invention of his imagination — Kermit.

"I guess if I had a favorite, it would be Kermit because I perform him and because we've been through this together from the start. I guess there is something in Kermit that is Jim Henson," he said of the puppet he first made from a discarded old green coat and a ping-pong ball sliced in half for eyes.

Henson says he is as inseparable from his Muppets as he is from his wife, who still puppeteers with him, and their five children.

"The Puppeteer is the personality behind the puppet. They are nothing more than what we make them and yet, they are much, much more," he said.

What's the key to the attraction between Henson and so many other adults and these Muppets?

"Sometimes I think it is easier for puppets to express certain emotions than it is for people. We want to project certain kinds of attitudes through them, and reinforce a certain kind of caring and warmth that we should all have for each other."

"When I'm working with them, I identify with them almost like people, because each one has its own personality," Henson said. "A lot of people feel our show ("The Muppets Show") is aimed at children, but it's interesting how many adults watch it and enjoy it as an indiscrete way of returning to what was once part of their childhood. Actually, the show is meant to be for everyone.

"We're all kids at heart and I think that has something to do with the appeal of the show."

If Kermit the Frog is the middle-of-the-roader who tries to keep the show rolling in the midst of all those crazies, Henson submits that he is very much like his little friend. Together, they have changed the face of puppetry and entertainment with a few hundred little somethings that Henson decided one day to call "Muppets." It's a word that sort of makes you smile even when you say it.

Circus:

John Herriot says. "My father did the same thing as I do, but never with Ringling Brothers. My father and grandfather were horse trainers and in the old circuses, the horse trainers were always prominent because there were so many horse acts.

"The horse trainers became known as equestrian directors and they eventually became the performance directors.

"My grandfather was with the '101 Ranch Real Wild West Show from Pompa City, Oklahoma,' " he says proudly. "The old Wild West shows paralleled the circus back then."

For Herriot, growing up in a circus family meant learning his father's craft and performing in the ring as a horse trainer in his own right. Then came seven years as assistant to the director of Circus World Museum in Baraboo, Wisconsin, once the headquarters of Ringling Brothers.

From there it was on to The Greatest Show On Earth, where he has been for the past ten years.

Along the way has come a firsthand understanding of the unique entertainment world that is the circus, an understanding that Herriot enhances with an encyclopdia-like knowledge he calls "the beautiful history of circus."

"When I was a young boy, we were kind of a carnival type thing. You know, 'take your wash off the line, the circus is in town.'

"But over a period of years, the history and the culture of the circus has evolved," he says. And he recites like a captivating storyteller the tales of circus yore.

Perhaps there is a relationship between this man and the modern-day, bestselling veterinarian-turned author, Dr. James Herriot, who shares his name and talent for storytelling. The performance director says he has traced his roots to Scotland and has thought about writing the vet-author about their possible parentage.

But Herriot's stories would seem proof enough of the link, from the chronicles of the merger of Ringling Brothers Circus with the Barnum and Bailey Circus during World War I ("The circus always traveled by rail and was getting sidetracked by troop movements, so they decided to merge") to the insights into clowning ("Back in the old days the clowns would occupy people as they came in while the pickpockets would work").

"There are certain types of people who get caught up in this nomadic way of life," Herriot says. Family tradition seems to be the strongest lifeline, and just as Herriot took the life of his father, so has his family.

His wife, whom he met in the circus, is still an active horse trainer. Currently she is home in Sarasota, Fla., the circus' home base, with their two youngest daughters who attend school. Herriot's older daughter Cindy is a member of the Ringling Brothers troupe traveling with her father. And his eldest daughter is married to an elephant trainer.

"We're able to have our families with us. Everyone has something to do and it keeps a marriage relationship strong. I remember an old lady who had been in the circus for many years who said she never saw a juvenile delinquent circus kid, and that's true. It's because all these kids are involved."

Carrying on the family tradition is no small accomplishment, Herriot will say. "Everybody in a circus has a desire to be in The Greatest Show on Earth. I'm fortunate. I made it. That may not be the world, but had I never been here, I would have been a little frustrated.

"I represent my father and a lot of other great equestrian people who never made it here, but I'm here. I'm part of those people who never made it. That's an awesome responsibility and it's thrilling."

Herriot will hardly acknowledge the challenge of a job that encompasses virtually every aspect of this traveling extravaganza. "I'm always overwhelmed myself. A show of the magnitude of ours and it all works because everyone knows their job. People say 'How do you do that?' Well, I don't."

True, there are no autograph hounds surrounding him now and no bows in the spotlight of the center ring. But Herriot knows another gratification.

"I've had my points. I was a Ring 2 star in the circus. But in the circus business, there are no overnight sensations. For anybody that achieves acclaim, it's because of years and years of work.

"We don't call each other circus people. The greatest tribute is to be called a showman. And when we talk about a showman we don't talk about things he did, we talk about all he did.

"Anyone with deep roots in the circus has pride because of longevity. The overall — that's the satisfaction."§

Story and photos by Katherine Rodeghier

I held my breath.

There isn't much else that you can do crossing the Andes in a bus when you're sure that you will be hurtled to your death at any moment.

Our guide told us we were taking the "back way" from Bogota, capital of Colombia to the Tierra Caliente (the hot country). We had foregone the toll route for this winding, narrow road which slithered over and around the mountains because it was the so-called "scenic" route.

And scenic it was. I have always loved mountains but these mountains, the mighty Andes of South America, were something to behold. No gently rolling foothills here, no prelude to magestic peaks — the Andes rise abruptly and dramatically in sheer cliffs thousands of feet high. They are green walls covered with tropical shrubs bearing flowers and fruit. Each bend in the road reveals a canyon, a valley, a river cloaked in white mist.

It looked like paradise and I was scared as hell.

We raced twisting and turning down the mountain from an elevation of nearly 10,000 feet to just 2,000 feet above sea level. We rounded hairpin turns coming within inches of oncoming trucks and buses, all traveling much too fast for conditions just as they do everywhere in this country. Like someone drawn to his fate, I stared down from the bus window. We were so close to the edge that I couldn't see the side of the road. It was a thousand feet straight down.

A broken-down bus jammed with people overtook us just as we started around another curve. The guide explained that the real danger in crossing the mountains is the vehicles themselves. Owned and operated by anyone who can scrape together enough money to buy an old bus or truck, these vehicles are often in bad condition. Sometimes their brakes are faulty.

From time to time along the route I saw an alcove chiseled into the side of the mountain and I noticed a statue inside. It was a statue of the Blessed Virgin and we were told that truck drivers stop at these devotional sites to light candles and say prayers to make it safely down the mountain.

There were no candles in my suitcase.

The opportunity to view the primal beauty of the Andes had a price. To witness this sight one had to come face to face with the harsh realities of life and death. I soon learned that this was a land of such contradictions. Colombia's finest attributes are offset by its severest handicaps. Beside beauty there is ugliness, beside new there is old, beside rich there is poor. It was a theme repeated over and over again.

Within a stone's throw of the high-rise apartments and sprawling mansions in Bogota were crude shacks set up by squatters.

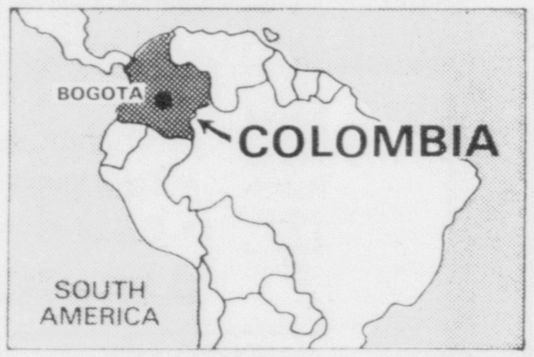
The city's streets were jammed with honking cars and people in a hurry. From out of nowhere appeared a man wearing a battered fedora and a poncho. He was leading a burro.

There were elaborate courtyards and manicured gardens. Packs of dogs ran wild over parkways littered with heaps of garbage. There were elegant restaurants, sophisticated nightclubs and modern shopping centers. There were people living in squalor and filth, children playing yards away from the rotting, rigid carcass of a dead dog.

Colombia is not the sort of place where one goes to relax and feel comfortable, although the country does have several fine resort areas. You go to Colombia to experience it, to arouse your senses with the sights and sounds of this exotic land, an environment totally foreign to your own.

Visit Colombia and you will see things you have never seen before, things you will remember for a lifetime. Colombia will interest you, perhaps fascinate you, but she won't let you escape from the harshness of an undeveloped country where poverty and ignorance are a way of life.

Colombia is still relatively new as a destination for tourists from North America. The people have not yet been spoiled by tourism and the countryside is still natural, still uncommercialized.



I was surprised to find that Bogota is a modern, cosmopolitan city with skyscrapers and luxury hotels such as the Bogota Hilton where rates range from $38 to $68. Unlike Mexico, which is quite nationalistic, Colombia has freely adopted some European customs. Houses in the wealthy areas of the city resemble English country mansions — brick construction with leaded windows and Tudor trim. Some of the restaurants serve the finest French cuisine. Both men and women are fashion conscious. The men wear tailored suits of European styling and the women wear leather boots, below the knee skirts and hats, just the type of outfit you might see on the Champs Elysees, the Via Veneto or Park Avenue.

Information for these articles was gathered during a press tour of Colombia sponsored and financed by Avianca Airlines, Hilton International and the Colombian Government Tourist Office.

Scenes from Colombia, clockwise: An old woman poses for a photograph in the Colombian state of Boyaca, a region of charming Spanish colonial towns. In the town of Villa de Leyva the market is a popular spot for tourists in the mood for bargaining for woolen ponchos, straw hats and baskets, and pottery. The tax man cometh. Clerks set up shop on the government square to prepare tax forms for Colombian citizens. It's one way to make a living in Bogota, Colombia's capital city.

Bogota is a jewel of a city walled by mountains 10,000 feet high. The city sprawls across a plateau 8,700 feet above sea level where the climate is cool and damp and misty. For 18 cents you can take a 3-minute cablecar ride to the summit of one of the eastern mountains where the Sanctuary of Monserrate is located. The ride is well worth the spectacular panorama of the mountains and city below.

On the mountain is an interesting church with a life-like statue of the fallen Christ to which many miracles have been attributed. There's also a restaurant and shops for browsing.

The city sleeping below is not as peaceful as it looks from this vantage point. Colombia has its share of crime and social problems and unfortunately Bogota seems to be the focus of it.

Around the turn of the century, people from the countryside of Colombia began moving into the city in search of prosperity. The result of this rapid growth, which still continues, is overpopulation, a shortage of housing, poverty and crime. The unemployment rate is now about 10 per cent and like most Latin American countries there is no middle class. People either have money and education or they are poor and ignorant.

The poverty is evident and there are stories about the crime. Guidebooks warn about pickpockets. A wealthy Bogotano may tell you about the dog he has to guard his home. Most people have live-in maids so there is always someone at home. You may hear about a woman whose ear lobes were torn when a thief grabbed her earrings.

The most chilling story I heard was told by my seat-mate on the flight home. A group of women were out shopping, riding in a car with the windows half open. A man holding a paper bag was standing at an intersection. The bag contained a rat. The rat was put in the window, the women leaped from the car and the thief drove off with the car and all its contents.

To avoid problems tourists should be especially careful with their possessions, stay in a good neighborhood and travel in groups. It would be best if someone in your group spoke Spanish as most Colombians are not accustomed to English-speaking visitors.

If you have not already heard about the trafficking of marijuana and cocaine from Colombia you may get a hint when you go through customs on your return home. It seemed that almost everyone on my flight was searched. Inspectors went through the contents of suitcases. I saw one pour out a handful of baby powder and sniff it and another pick through a pound of coffee. A very polite, courteous custom's inspector took me to a private office to examine the heel of my shoe.

The use of cocaine is part of the history of Colombia. Indian tribes used it for ceremonial purposes and some of the needles, cups and other implements used in these ceremonies are on display in Bogota's Museo Del Oro (Gold Museum).

The Gold Museum is a "must see" on any itinerary in this city. It contains some 16,000 pieces of pre-Hispanic gold Indian jewelry and crafts, the largest collection in the world, valued at $40 million in weight alone. The collection represents only a portion of the gold pieces fashioned by the Indians of the region. The rest were taken to Spain and melted down to add to personal fortunes.

Bogota has many colorful sites. There's Bolivar Square with its cathedral and government buildings; the presidential palace with its guards who wear spiked helmets, evidence of Germany's influence on this country; La Candelaria, the old colonial section of the city; the finance office where clerks sit with typewriters on tables in the open-air square waiting to prepare your tax forms; and the flower market where you can buy a dozen long stemmed red roses for $2.

Bogota's weather is about the same all year. The average temperature is 57 degrees and it often rains a portion of the day. Outside the capital city it is a different story, however. When it comes to climate Colombia is truly a land of contrasts.

Situated in the northwest corner of South America just below Panama, Colombia borders on both the Pacific and the Caribbean, it has three mountain ridges, flat, fertile plains, desert and Amazon jungle. It may be 50 degrees below zero up in the mountains and 110 degrees in the hottest of the hot country. The desert may get 8 inches of rain per year while the rain forest further north gets 250 inches.

You don't need to travel far from Bogota to see this change in climate either. The state of Boyaca is just a few hours drive and here the scenery gradually changes to barren countryside similar to the mountains and arid plains of the American Southwest. The area was once covered by a lake and is rich in fossils. Recently an archeologist uncovered the skeleton of a dinosaur in his diggings here.

In Boyaca one finds small Spanish colonial towns with white churches, red cobblestone streets and marketplaces where you can bargain for pottery, straw baskets and ponchos. The most typical town of the region, Villa de Leyva, is a good place to poke around for a day.

The day I crossed the mountains into the hot country I was bound for the town of Girardot where temperatures climb into the 80s and 90s. The hot country is a favorite getaway spot for Bogotanos. They come to the resorts in this area to fish, swim, play golf or tennis, and gamble in the casinos.

An incident in one such resort reminded me that Colombia is not yet accustomed to catering to tourists. It's still a bit primitive, still unspoiled, and perhaps that's a point in its favor.

We were sitting at a poolside table and we decided to order a drink before lunch. Everyone else asked for beer but I ordered a pina colada, a rum and coconut drink. A few minutes later the waiter returned with everyone's drink but mine and in Spanish our host asked what the trouble was. The waiter told him he had sent out a boy to chop down a coconut.

I ordered another one. §

In Bogota's flower market you can buy a dozen long stemmed red roses for $2.

Shop for the bargains from emeralds to coffee

If your vacation plans are going to take you to Colombia be sure to bring along a shopping list and plenty of Colombian pesos.

There are bargains to be had in a country where coffee is 80 cents a pound, emeralds are 35 to 40 per cent off and you can negotiate the price of leather goods, ponchos, pottery and other handicrafts in the village marketplace.

Of all Colombia's worldly goods it is most famous for its emeralds — and with good reason. Roughly 90 per cent of the world's emeralds come from Colombia, the remainder coming from Rhodesia and Russia. The gems are one of the country's leading exports, accounting for close to 4.5 million in foreign currency. A fine stone can bring as much as $10,000 per carat.

Emeralds are more costly than diamonds of equal weight and in the U.S. they can also be much harder to come by. In Colombia emeralds are so plentiful they are sold by vendors on the street. These vendors, however, are usually unscrupulous so tourists in the market for emeralds should beware of fakes. The Empresa Colombiana de Minas has an information office where you can get a list of reputable jewelers. These jewelers issue a certificate of quality from this agency with each gem that is sold.

H. Stern jewelers is one of the most well-known of Bogota's good jewelers. I saw emeralds here by the platterful at prices starting at $300 a carat. A sales clerk told me there are basically two types of tourists who buy emeralds, the type who buys a ten point (tenth of a carat) emerald in the least expensive category as a souvenir and the type who buys a $5,000 emerald without a setting and takes it home as an investment.

The majority of Colombian emeralds are taken from government mines. Part of the reason for the gem's preciousness is the difficulty encountered in its extraction. Unlike many other gems, it is not found in sand or gravel but imbedded in hard rock.

In general emeralds are roughly 35 to 40 per cent less when purchased in Colombia although this is difficult to determine since emeralds vary greatly in quality. Less than 1 per cent of all emeralds found are of top quality. The value of a stone is determined by its color, size, purity and life or "fire." It is difficult for the average person to see the difference between a low quality and a top quality stone unless they are laid side by side.

Next to emeralds Colombia is most well known for its coffee which accounts for 12 per cent of the world market. The story goes that coffee was introduced in Colombia when a parish priest encouraged parishioners to plant coffee as an act of penance for sins. Apparently the Colombians had their share of wrong doings because the country is now the world's second largest coffee producer, next to Brazil.

The slopes of the Andes are a paradise for coffee — which is grown at altitudes of 3,000 to 6,000 feet. The rich soil, mild temperatures, and ample rainfall are magic ingredients. Coffee is very cheap in Colombia but unfortunately the finest beans are usually exported so you may have difficulty buying top quality brew.

It takes a lot to produce a pound of coffee. Seeds are planted and tended for a year, then the plant, about 20 inches tall, is transplanted under shade trees. Plants are pruned to keep them at a height of about 6 feet and after 3 or 4 years the tree finally blossoms. It is usually in the fifth year that the full crop of berries appears and these are harvested to produce coffee beans. It takes about two thousand berries, or the yield of one tree, to make one pound of roasted coffee.

A fairly good buy in Colombia is leather. Bags and boots are two common purchases. You can buy a pair of hand-made ladies fashion boots for about $40.

Woolen shawls and ponchos are also favorite gift and souvenir items. At a marketplace in Boyaca we bargained a merchant down to $14 for a large thick-woolen poncho. The material alone would have easily sold for $10 a yard here.

Other handicraft items can also be bargained for in marketplaces. Common purchases are various pottery sculptures and plant holders and straw hats, baskets, mats and handbags. — K.R.

Colombia's high altitude may leave you breathless

Travel in a high altitude can be a breath-taking experience particularly if your lungs are not accustomed to fighting for oxygen.

You would be surprised at the difference a few thousand feet can make to your body. You may have left Chicago, which has an elevation of about 600 feet, as a healthy, vigorous, young adult. After arriving in Bogota, 8,700 feet, you'll feel like a run-down, out-of-shape, over-the-hill individual with tired blood.

After climbing a flight of about a dozen stairs on my first day in Bogota I felt like I had been jumping rope for 10 minutes. A dedicated jogger in our group took his usual run the morning after our arrival and found he could run only half the distance he ran at home the day before. None of us slept very well, waking up periodically during the night and rising early in the morning. Some people had chest pains and felt dizzy.

All these symptoms are quite normal, said Dr. David Cugell, president of the Chicago Lung Assn. and a professor of pulmonary medicine at Northwestern Memorial hospital. The cause is a lack of oxygen. The atmosphere is 21 per cent oxygen whether you are at sea level or at 12,000 feet, he said. The difference is in the air pressure, which at 12,000 feet, is roughly half of what it is at sea level. "The higher you go the lower the air pressure of the atmosphere and therefore the less the total quantity of oxygen," he said.

I saw the effects of this change in air pressure when I opened my suitcase after arriving home. My plastic shampoo bottle looked as though it had taken a right hook from Muhammad Ali, a phenomenon which I blamed on aggressive baggage handlers. But when I opened a glass bottle of nail polish remover there was a distinct PSSSssss and I knew that the low air pressure in Bogota was to blame.

Air pressure is also to blame for the sometimes rough landings and tardy take-offs of aircraft in high altitudes. Because the air has less buoyancy at these altitudes, landings can be a bit harder and noisier. Take-offs are slower, too. In Chicago it takes roughly 20 to 30 seconds for an aircraft to become airborne once it starts down the runway but in Bogota it took 45 seconds and I am told that in some places in Peru you might be on the ground a full minute before finally taking wing. None of these situations are particularly dangerous but they can mean a few anxious moments if you don't know what's going on.

The best thing to do when you arrive in a high altitude is take it easy the first few days, stay away from physical exercise and walk slowly. Your body soon adapts. When the Olympics were held in Mexico City, altitude 7,000 feet, many countries sent their athletes there for training so they had time to become accustomed to the altitude.

You will feel some effects of high altitude even in Denver, 5,300 feet, and at some of the highest cities in the world. Cuzco, Peru for example, which has an altitude of 11,480, hotels often have a supply of oxygen on hand.

The incidence of heart and lung disease is higher among people who live in high altitudes, said Dr. Cugall. Tourists who suffer from these types of diseases, emphysema and bronchitis, for example, will notice the effects of high altitude more than others, he said. Travelers with a chronic illness may feel more confident if they consult their doctor before embarking on a journey to the mountains. — K.R.

South America waits to be discovered

by Dick Kleiner

It's about time we Norte Americanos shifted our vacation sights a few thousand miles southwest.

We always think first of Europe when we plan a trip beyond our own borders. But I am here to suggest you give South America a try.

This is the last stop on my almost four weeks exploration of four countries — Brazil, Argentina, Chile and Peru — and there are some things here Europe can't touch.

There is, for example, the Amazon River. The Danube and the Rhine may be peaceful little streams, picturesque and loaded with charm, but the Amazon is something else again. They tell you that the Amazon pours enough water into the Atlantic every day to supply New York City for nine years, and you can believe it when you see the size of that river.

But you go up some of the tributaries at night in a canoe, with your guide shushing you and shining his flashlight to spot crocodiles, and you don't think in terms of water power. Or follow one of the guides through primitive paths through the jungle and into villages where Yagua and Jivaro Indians still paint their faces red and still kill game with curare-tipped darts propelled from blow guns.

That's part of what South America has to offer. As a contrast, there is Buenos Aires, an ultrasophisticated city that tries to out-Paris Paris and out-Rome Rome and comes close to succeeding. And there is Rio de Janeiro, a resort city on the style of Miami Beach or Waikiki.

Traveling around South America is not exactly luxury or super-comfortable. Even the finest hotels hardly measure up to U.S. ideas of luxury and comfort.

And be prepared for expensive. It's not only that the prices are high, but it's what happens after the prices that kills you. Buenos Aires, in Argentina, is the worst offender.

On top of your bill, in restaurants, they tack on a 24 per cent charge for service — the tip — and then a 16 per cent tax "to help us get back on our feet after what the Perons did to us," as one Argentinian explained.

The result: you have to pay 40 per cent more than the cost of the meal. Argentinian steaks — which are superb — are not expensive, until that extra 40 per cent is laid on you.

Speaking of food, we North Americans automatically think of South American food as being hot and very spicy. That is not true. In fact, it's just the opposite in many cases.

In Brazil, famous for shrimp and lobster dishes, I found everything too bland — and there never is pepper on the table. Peru has some of the most interesting dishes — anticuchos, a kind of shishkebab made of chicken livers and hearts, and ceviche, bits of fish "cooked" in lemon juice — and these are spicier than the average South American cuisine.

In South America, there are comparatively few tourists from the United States. Compared to Europe, we are just a trickle. The most frequent South American tourist is the South American — Brazilians in Argentina, Chileans in Peru, Paraguayans in Brazil.

South America's weather like our own, is varied. In the Amazon, you can be hit by tropical downpours that are a show in themselves. In Antofagasta, in Chile, it never rains — and the people take the windshield wipers off their cars.

But Rio is like Los Angeles — warm and sunny most of the time. B.A., as even the Argentinians call Buenos Aires, is further south and, hence, it gets some cooler weather.

There are things to worry about in South America. Crime, for one thing. It's bad — pickpockets, thieves, robbers. B.A. is the safest. There you feel comfortable walking the streets at night.

But in Lima you don't even feel safe in the daytime. In Rio, they advise you not to take anything with you when you go to the beach — just put it down for a second, and it's gone.

South America has traditionally been a continent of very rich and very poor. It still seems that way. Wherever you go, you see the slum settlements — favelas — on hillsides where squatters live in paper shacks without any sanitation.

Rio has them. Santiago has them. There seem to be fewer in Buenos Aires. But Lima is very depressing. Mile after mile after mile of slums and grey, drab people living in grey, drab areas.

A few odds and ends of observation about South America:

Rio's beaches are wide, long, pretty. But the Cariocas, as the Rio people call themselves, use them only in the morning. "If you find someone on the beach in the afternoon," a Carioca told me, "it's either a maid or a tourist."

Argentinians are fascinated by Europe, and B.A. studiously copies everything French and Italian. The best food I had on the whole trip was an Italian restaurant in B.A., where you could get lovely canneloni and other Italian dishes for around $1.

The Peruvians make jokes, and the Chileans are usually the butt of those jokes, which are something like our Polish joke. Example: a Chilean space exploration team decided to go to the sun. When they were reminded that the sun is very hot, the head Chilean scientist said, "Do you think we are stupid? We will go at night."

Peoria's Pettengill-Morron House is open for tours on Sundays.

Kettledrum fest set in Peoria

Some Sunday this month, before the cold weather really sets in, drive down to Peoria, Ill. and sample a bit of historic hospitality.

The annual Kettledrum celebration, sponsored by the Peoria Historical Society, will be held this year from 2 to 5 p.m. tomorrow and next Sunday. The celebration is akin to the open house that was given by early settlers as the last warm gesture of friendship before the cold weather limits travel and visiting. Kettledrum derives its name from the spirited rumble of laughter and talk during these celebrations because the noise sounded like the music of the kettledrum, an instrument well known to colonial society.

Weekend

Kettledrum is held in Peoria's oldest home, the Flanagan House, 942 N.E. Glen Oak Dr. In the dining room mulled cider and spice cakes will be served free to all guests but the recipes for these concoctions will be offered for sale. There will be a demonstration of straw weaving and floral arrangements made from wheat and other plants from the countryside and gardens near Peoria. Green plants also will be offered for sale.

In the kitchen of Flanagan house candied apples and taffy will be made and sold and in the basement there will be an exhibit of farm implements and antique tools. There will be candle dipping and Christmas tree ornaments and in the children's room upstairs boys and girls will make spiced fruit pomanders for sale while rose, kitchen and old English garden herbs will be offered for sale across the hall. Other items and crafts will be found in the Flanagan House gift shop.

The Flanagan House and the Pettengill-Morron House, another historic home in Peoria, are interesting destinations for Sunday drives any time of the year. Both are open Sundays from 2 to 5 p.m. and to tour each home a donation of $1 for adults and 25 cents children is asked.

The Flanagan House was built in 1837 by John C. Flanagan, a Philadelphia lawyer who moved west with his widowed mother, his sisters and brother. The house is made from materials found in the Peoria area such as brick made near where St. Francis Hospital is now located, limestone which was brought by friendly Indians from Kickapoo Creek, and walnut from trees sawed on the property. The outside brick walls are a solid 15 inches in thickness.

The interior of the Flanagan House features a sweeping staircase and fireplaces in almost every room. Iron decoration on the porch came from France and was added in 1852. The furniture inside the house tends to be heavy in the style of the late Empire.

Pettengill-Morron House, an eleven-room Victorian mansion at 1212 West Moss Ave., was built in 1868 by Moses Pettengill, a hardware merchant from Salisbury, N.H. Jean Morron acquired the property in 1953 and lived in the house until her death in 1966. Except for a few articles transferred to museums, the furniture, china, silver, crystal, paintings and Oriental rugs are in the house just as Miss Morron left them.

Information on the Flanagan or Pettengill-Morron houses is available from the Peoria Historical Society which is headquartered in Flanagan House, phone 309-674-1921. Peoria is about a 3½-hour drive from the Northwest suburbs and is reached by driving on I-80 west and then south on I-180 and Rte. 29.

Cliffs of Moher in Western Ireland hold magical beauty

by Mark J. Roth

County Clare, Western Ireland. It had rained earlier in the day, and looked as if it would again before long. Low, dark clouds scudded before a gusty west wind, and the ocean dampness made it feel much colder than November should have been.

I was pedaling my bicycle slowly toward the Cliffs of Moher when I noticed that a man in the field was waving to me, rather wildly, I thought. He was visible only from the waist up, a couple of hundred yards from the road. His arms crossed above his head as he waved, and he held some sort of hand tool with which he had been digging.

Laboriously he began a jerky trot toward me through the tall plants. I pulled to a stop, glancing behind me to see if he was perhaps waving to someone else, but in that rocky and lonely land there was no one about. He was wearing what looked like an old knee-length overcoat and a cap; he shouted something that sounded like, "Ho, ho," into the wind. He seemed worried that I might not wait for him. Was there some emergency? I wondered.

Finally he arrived, short of breath, at the roadside. He paused to look me over from top to bottom, then inspected the bike from front to back. "Where you headed for?" he asked.

"The Cliffs of Moher."

"A fine sight indeed." Pause. "And where you coming from?"

"Kilrush," I said, naming a town about 10 miles away.

"No, no, where are you coming from?"

"London," I ventured, trying again for the right answer. "I've ridden from London, through Wales, took the ferry to Dublin, and come through Cork to here."

"So, you're English, then."

"No," I said. "I'm American, from New York, but I've been riding since London."

There was another pause, and I waited for the man to reveal the point of his waving me to a stop.

"Fine day," he offered. I agreed. Unless you are finding it hard to breathe for all the water pelting earthward, it is a fine day in Western Ireland.

"So you're from America. Well, well."

Another lull in the conversation.

Finally I said, "Guess I better be going ... slow riding into this wind."

"You enjoy the cliffs, now," said he. I pushed off, then looked back; the farmer waved.

By the time I reached the Cliffs of Moher rain was falling, but the wind was so strong that the lee side of a stone wall kept the bike mostly dry. Some 600 feet below the grassy cliff top the Atlantic pounds to a stop and plumes of salty spray ascend. It is spectacular when the wind is blowing — as it usually is. And — as might be expected in a scantily populated land — I had this magnificence to myself.

Until the potato famine of the mid-19th century Ireland had a population of between two and three times its present 3 million. Then in 1845, 1846, and 1847, the country — especially this western part — was hard hit by emigration. Today, old people tend to ask an American if, perhaps, you might know their cousin Flaherty in Brooklyn. Many have more relatives in Liverpool or Boston or New York than in Ireland. This gives an incongruous worldliness to some who have never been beyond the borders of County Clare or Kerry: They're ignorant of Dublin and Belfast, but know the names of streets in South Boston.

The famine took place over a century ago, but the west of Ireland is still a difficult place to live. It is not surprising that many of its young people seek sunnier and easier lives elsewhere. However, it is also a hauntingly beautiful — almost magical — land.

Though some may disagree, for me the most exciting scenery in Ireland is found in counties Cork, Kerry, Clare, and Galway, roughly in an arc from Cork to Galway. From Dublin there is fast, direct train service to both cities. Airline passengers from North America can easily start a tour of western Ireland by disembarking at Shannon Airport, the first reached and least expensive destination in Europe.

When you come to western Ireland, bring your raincoat. Weeks of cold rain and one day of snow eventually forced me to put my bike aboard a train and retreat for summer climes. Yet this rocky, tumultuous place is perhaps more clearly and directly seen in wind and rain and fog than in sunshine and gentle breezes.

Another advantage of going off-season: Autos driven by tourists crowd the roads in July and August, but in November and December donkey and horse carts usually outnumber motor vehicles.

Many long-time residents here must feel relieved when the tourists and their noisy vehicles retreat at the close of the season. In many places dependent on tourism (the leading industry in Ireland) some of those serving visitors are not happy with the influx, and to some extent — despite what the Tourist Board might have to say about the friendly Irish — I sometimes noticed that phenomenon here.

But to counteract this impression, there is the memory of a farmer who ran from his field just to talk with a stranger. Who could better symbolize a country's hospitality?

On the go

Walking trips in Andes are offered next year

Mountain Travel offers four different walking trips in the Peruvian Andes in 1978. All trips are limited to about fifteen people plus a mountaineer/leader.

The Peruvian Highlands trip includes nearly a week in the mountain town of Cuzco, a five day walk in the Vilcabamba mountains with camping in high meadows often populated by herds of Ilamas and alpacas, two full days at the famous ruins of Machu Picchu, and a seven day hike in the high Vilcanota mountains west of Cuzco. The 25-day trip costs $1,675, plus airfare.

The new Trans-Andean Trek, besides including ample time in Cuzco and Machu Picchu, makes a 19-day trek down into the tropical rain forest of the upper Amazon Basin, passing through remote villages and Inca ruins accessible only on foot. The trip is 31 days long and costs $1,725, plus airfare.

The Cordillera Blanca is a mountain range in the north of Peru which contains forty peaks more than 19,700 feet high. In July of 1978, Mountain Travel plans a 3-week trek through the heart of this wilderness. This trip costs $1,825.

And finally in the Cordillera Huayhuash, Mountain Travel offers a 30-day trek. This trip costs $1,795 and will be offered in June.

On all these Peruvian mountain walk, the bulk of the gear is carried by burros and the camp and cooking chores are done by a Peruvian staff. The hiking, while not exceptionally difficult, takes place at an average altitude of 10,000 to 13,000 feet. For detailed information on these and more than seventy other Mountain Travel adventures worldwide, write for a free copy of their 64-page catalog to Mountain Travel, Solano Avenue, Albany, Calif. 94706. Miami Beach gets a facelift Escapees from the sleet and cold of the North will find an added dimension to Miami Beach.

Metropolitan Dade County's (Greater Miami) multi-million dollar beach restoration project has produced about 2.1 miles of "new" 300-foot-wide public beach along Miami Beach, Surfside and Dade's Haulover Park. An added bonus to the new sands are thousands of rarely-found seashells pumped up by the dredge operating a mile or so offshore.

Eventually, the entire 10.5-mile oceanfront from the main shipping channel at south Miami Beach through all of Haulover Park will be restored. Public access will be through parks and some forty-eight street endings with parking and sanitary facilities.

The completed portion is 75 per cent of the 2.8-mile first phase of the overall project. Begun in May, work has been suspended for the winter months due to changing ocean currents which prevent proper operation of the dredge. In deference to tourists, sunbathers, shell hunters and swimmers, all pipeline and other equipment will be removed from the oceanfront until work commences again next May.

The estimated $64.4 million cost for all 10.5 miles is being shared by the federal government, the state of Florida and Dade County.

Paraguay pleases the American tourist

by Diane Page

Blessed are the tourists who wander into Paraguay because it's just the kind of South American country they imagined.

This is an exuberantly tropical nation ruled by an old time Caudillo (leader), a place where natives still observe the siesta.

The appeal to the traveler begins the moment one steps off the plane at Asuncion's President Stroessner Airport. There is a virtual bazaar at the airport; tiny booths weighted down with every handicraft item one could wish to buy at ridiculously low prices. Stashed in between the hand-embroidered blouses ($8), hammocks ($20) and tooled leather bags, there are also bottles of Scotch whisky ($5) and French perfume.

Paraguay is a flourishing trade center and not all of it is legal. Smuggling has been called the major industry of this California-sized country squeezed in between Brazil, Argentina and Bolivia.

But most of the 2.6 million inhabitants live off the fertile green land of gently rolling hills between the Paraguay and Parana rivers.

The city of Asuncion, overlooking the Paraguay River, seems to belong more to the past century. Cows amble across the road as one drives down the two-lane road connecting the airport to the capital.

The municipal government recently placed a "help wanted" ad for cowboys to round up the strays.

The modern buildings crowding the narrow streets seem out of place by the large plazas where crickets form a chorus at sunset.

The older buildings — churches, presidential palace, and many colonial houses — are well kept up with fresh coats of paint.

Tourists can feel a part of the past staying at the Gran Hotel del Paraguay, a comfortable enlargement of the home where dictator Francisco Solano Lopez entertained with his Irish mistress Eliza Lynch in the 1860s. The hotel, with a swimming pool and a tiny zoo in the garden, is secluded in a suburb not far from the center of Asuncion.

Going into the countryside, one can drive 20 miles east of Asuncion to the village of Itaugua, founded in 1728 and dedicated to lace-making. The lace is called "nanduti," which means spider web in Guarani, the Indian language still spoken in Paraguay.

The nanduti can take the form of doilies, table cloths, hats or wall hangings. The best examples are hung in front of the houses in good weather. (UPI)

Weingarten documents plane crash

by Toni Ginnetti

He was only ten years old on that dreary Saturday morning, July 28, 1945, waiting with other sons and daughters of New York City employes to meet Mayor La Guardia.

But the party never started, and the day that should have been festive turned into a nightmare that Arthur Weingarten would never forget.

A B-25 bomber, lost in heavy fog, crashed into the 79th floor of the Empire State Building in a fiery diaster that killed thirteen and injured twenty-six.

Weingarten, the son of a city fire marshal, thought he would see something akin to a movie when he convinced his father to take him along to the scene. But the fantasy quickly dissipated into reality to become a story he would never forget.

Weingarten has turned that childhood memory into a penetrating look at the incident, documenting the tragedy through interviews with eyewitnesses, survivors, families of victims and a classified military report he obtained during his research.

"The Sky Is Falling" (Grosset & Dunlap, $10) is the result of a two-year project by Weingarten undertaken after a fifteen-year career as a television and movie writer and producer.

"About two years ago, a show I was producing was cancelled. I was working on a novel at the time and I had reached a point where I was stuck in it. I thought about what I should do and I thought, well, maybe I should look into this incident a little more," he said.

The incident had been a young boy's shocking introduction to death. "I remember it was the very first time I saw dead people. I remember seeing a stretcher carrying a woman out and the tarp slipped away for a moment and her face was charred black. That was a picture that gave me nightmares for months afterward," he said.

Weingarten entwines the lives of those who fate brought tragically together to tell the story.

"I saw the interweaving of lives," he said. "That started to intrigue me. It's not the story itself of a plane crash, it's the junction of lives. Thirty-six people basically did the same thing they always did each day on that day and yet to some it brought tragedy, even death."

Interviews with nearly 200 persons provided the foundation upon which Weingarten has built his book, but perhaps the most intriguing aspect of the work is his revelation of a never-before released military report on the incident.

"I literally had a 'Deep Throat' emerge," he said. Countless letters to authorities and the aid of military friends proved fruitless in obtaining the report until Weingarten's source came forward.

"This person had access to all files, saw my letters and out of sheer curiosity looked up the report. The person told me 'for the life of me I don't know why they won't let you have it.' "

The report concluded that total pilot error was involved, as well as ground control failures and the failure of the military to retrain combat-flying personnel for civilian flying.

But more importantly, Weingarten learned that the military had refused to release the thirty-year-old report because of a legal technicality that would open the door to renewed lawsuits against the government by families of the injured and killed.

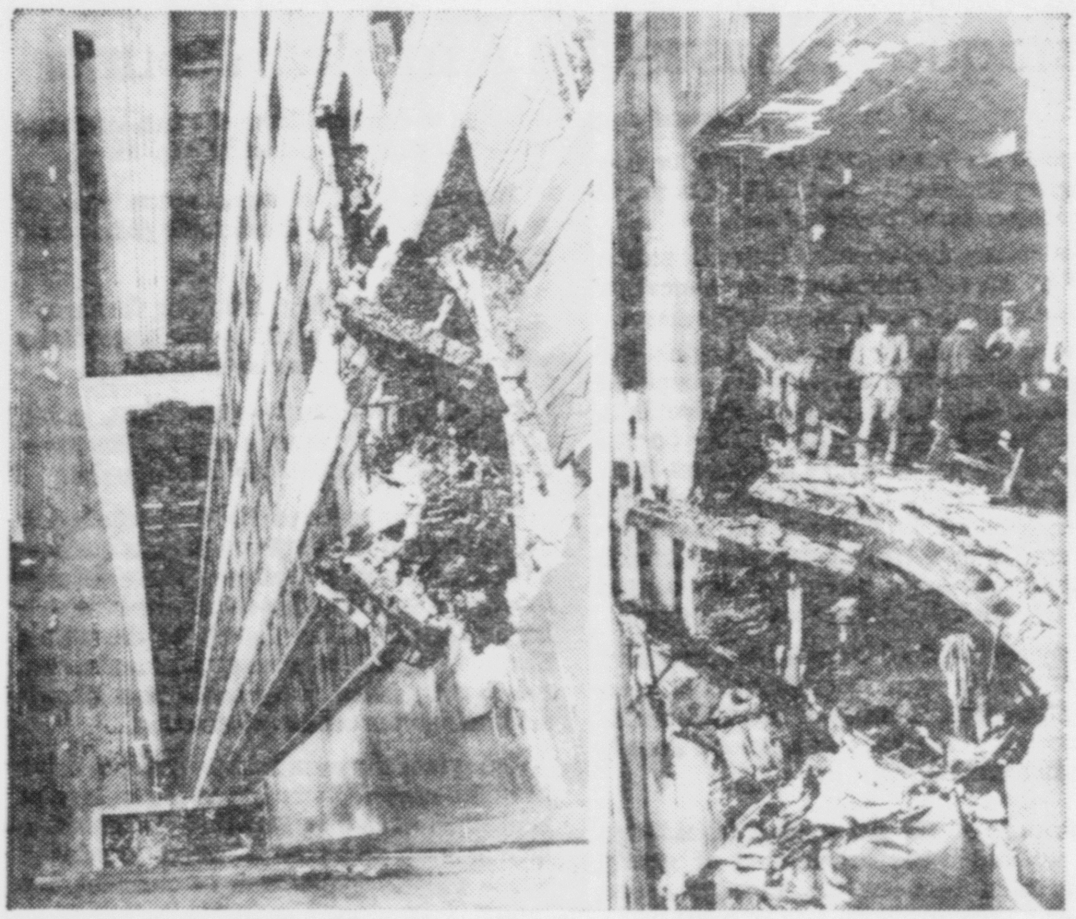
Arthur Weingarten had a personal reason for writing about the 1945 Empire State Building airplane crash — he was there when it happened.

"The statute of limitations does not run out if information that was available at the time was never introduced," Weingarten said.

"It looks like some lawsuits now will be reopened because of this."

The book recounts the stories of the victims, the survivors and the heroes who emerged from the tragedy, but it is not a "disaster story," nor will it be portrayed as a "disaster film" in the rights which have just been sold, Weingarten said.

"It is not a disaster book. It is the coming together of all these lives at one tragic moment in history."



When an Army B-25 plunged into the seventy-ninth floor of the Empire State Building the results were devastating.

Merlyn's magic weaves sensitive Arthurian tale

THE BOOK OF MERLYN by T. H. White (University of Texas Press, $9.95).

Reviewed by Diane C. Mermigas

The inevitable destruction of Camelot and the pitiful end of its warrior king Arthur was always a conclusion that was disturbingly absent from T. H. White's version of the Arthurian romances.

The onetime English Department head and literary scholar who was inspired by Thomas Malory's 15th Century work "Morte d'Arthur" while leasing a gamekeeper's cottage in Stowe Ridings, didn't see the publication of his "The Once and Future King" completed as he had hoped before his death in 1965.

The war and a shortage of precious paper prohibited his five-volume fantasy from being properly completed. "The Book of Merlyn" was only recently discovered in the Humanities Research Center at the University of Texas in Austin, providing an intriguing end to a remarkable collection of Arthurian tales.

The images White paints are absolutely beautiful. Merlyn visits Arthur on the eve of his fateful battle with his bastard son, Mordred. He soothes the weary, wrinkled hands and mind of the king, miserable at his failure and fearing that history will forget him.

Merlyn helps Arthur reconcile himself by bringing him to the cave where the wizard was trapped by a nymph, Nimue, to confer with the talking, teaching animals of boyhood years.

So, hand-in-hand, they fly over Salisbury Plain, past Stonehenge and into Cornwall and Arthur's memorable past and a meeting with half a dozen articulate, bright animals in the Combination Room of the College of Life.

The king is lifted from the depths of depression with conversation about communism, capitalism and war.

To better understand the futile existence of man and the dilemmas of the human condition, Merlyn changes Arthur first into a mighty ant and then into a wild goose — just as was done when he was a youngster named "Wart," trying to learn what he could of life in preparation for his years as a leader.

It is a chance for Arthur's soul to soar one more time before his fate is fulfilled.

Without being able to stop the tides of his destiny, a restless Arthur reluctantly returns to his crumbling kingdom.

Throughout "The Book of Merlyn," White allows the master Merlyn to periodically talk in future terms, knowing what would become of Arthur's realm and his Britain.

He assures Arthur that the likes of the monk Nennius, Geoffrey of Monmouth and even a champ named T. H. White would be writing about Arthur's astonishing ideals and feats well into the 20th Century.

Although it is sometimes disturbing and confusing to suddenly fall upon the words of an enchanter talking about the future as if it had already happened, it is a delightful part of the book. "The difficulty of living backwards and thinking forwards is that you become confused about the present. It is also the reason why one prefers to escape into the abstract," Merlyn explains.

White has assured the continued prosperity of the Arthurian legend by giving the longtime popular tales a new injection of life and meaning.

There has never been a more appropriate ending to the tales of quests for the Holy Grail and a love triangle between the true friends and lovers of Arthur, his Queen Guinevere and his best friend and knight Lancelot.

Whether you have read the Arthurian tales as a child for fun or as an adult searching for answers to a sometimes bewildering life, T. H. White has posthumously tied up the loose ends on yet another treasured version of those legends which will still be the source of love and hope to millions when all else fails.

White himself said it best at the close of his final book. "For I am inclined to believe that my beloved Arthur of the future is sitting at this very moment among his learned friends . . . they will give us happiness in the world once more and chivalry, and the old medieval blessing of certain simple people — who tried, at any rate, in their own small way, to still the ancient brutal dream."

Mystery of Evanston's Starr Faithfull revisited

by Norman Nadel

When the shapely, young body of Starr Faithfull was found on the sand at Long Beach, Long Island, the Monday morning of June 8, 1931, her name provoked more speculation than the meager facts of her bizarre death.

It sounded made-up, like a chorus girl's, or a burlesque entertainer's, or a movie star's (what about Theda Bara, born Theodosia Goodman in Cincinnati?). But the facts — the facts of her name, at least — were mundane. Twenty-five years earlier, in Evanston, Ill., Helen Wyman had named her baby daughter Starr because she liked the sound of it. Years later, after Helen had divorced Frank Wyman and married Stanley Faithfull, Stanley had adopted Starr and her sister.

Nevertheless, newspapers described her as a debutante, which was ridiculous; neither the Wymans nor the Faithfulls had ever amounted to anything socially. Or as a prostitute. After all, when she was found, drowned and otherwise fully clothed, she wasn't wearing panties, and didn't that let everybody know what kind of a girl she must have been?

Eventually some specifics of her anguished, short life did emerge, including a circumstance even more shocking than the wildest speculation in print or gossip. But nobody knew how or why she died.

Sandra Scoppettone, a writer who lives in Greenport, near the outermost tip of Long Island, was born five years after Starr Faithfull died, and didn't know of the notorious case until she was researching crime for another writer, a friend, in 1975.

"I want this one," Miss Scoppettone declared, as she began to turn up reorts about Starr's mysterious demise. And that was the genesis of "Some Unknown Person" (Putman, $8.95), a novel blended of facts and necessary speculation. Expectations are high: first hardcover printing is 25,000 copies and next year Bantam will issue 375,000 copies of the book in paperback.

Miss Scoppettone began with the usual writer's research — library archives of newspaper and other published reports of the time. While visiting in Greenwich Village, she walked down to 12 St. Luke's Place, where the Faithfulls had lived, and got to meet their landlady.

"You're not the first writer to want to know about Starr," she quipped slyly to Sandra. "after she died, a young fellow came down and asked a lot of questions. He wrote a book, but he got it all wrong." The young fellow had been John O'Hara, whose novel, "Butterfield 8," appeared in 1935, with its tragic heroine, Gloria Wandrous, somewhat loosely based on Starr Faithfull.

Did Starr Faithfull die an accidental death? After forty-six years it is still the subject of great speculation.

The book that emerged from Miss Scoppettone's research had to center on the most lurid circumstance of the case, and the single factor which had most to do with shaping — or crippling — the girl's outlook on life:

At the age of 11, Starr had been seduced by a relative, Andrew J. Peters, 45, the Mayor of Boston, who used her sexually for the next eight or nine years, keeping her dependent by addicting her to alcohol, pills, ether. She never liked what he made her do but it brought her trips, gifts, attention and the blissful state induced by the little bottle of ether he'd hold out until she begged for it.

So it was hardly surprising that she grew up with no concept of loving a boy or man, other than romantic magazine stories, or that she saw sex just as a distasteful but effective way of getting gifts and attention.

Starr's diaries, along with contemporary accounts, gave Miss Scoppettone essential insights, but she still had to fabricate at least the final two-and-a-half days in Starr's life. At hearings following the girl's death, the last person to admit seeing Starr Faithfull alive was a beautician in Grand Central Station, New York City, who had spoken to her at noon on Friday, June 5.

Starr, who loved parties, was not one to spend a weekend alone. She might have crashed a bon voyage fete aboard some departing ship. All that is known is that this girl, an expert swimmer, had drowned in shallow water (there was sand in her lungs). She'd been taking the barbiturate Veronal; there was enough in her system to have made her sleepy, but not to have knocked her out.

So author Scoppettone had to create one or more companions for that final weekend, and to surmise how Starr died. She elected to blend in the saga of an Italian-American family.

"I used my own background somewhat," admits Miss Scoppettone, who is Italian-American, "but the family in the book is not my family.

"As for my account of the end of Starr's life, I believe that's how it happened. It was accidental. She did write those suicide letters but she wasn't trying suicide at the moment she died. There was a man involved, I'm sure."

As a novel, "Some Unknown Person" has impact more for its factual content than for literary style, yet Miss Scoppettone's weaving of this unsolved crime with imagined conversations and encounters is credible and absorbing. It hadn't occurred to her that the bookjacket painting — a shirtsleeved young man alone in a rowboat, with a portrait profile of Starr superimposed — suggested Theodore Dreiser's classic novel, "An American Tragedy."

Until now, Sandra Scoppettone had earned a modest living with her writing, which has included a play, screenplays for films and TV, and two novels.

Now the situation has changed. Bantam's contract for "Some Unknown Person" promises a 375,000 printing also for her next book. Miss Scoppettone has no idea, at this point, what it will be about. (Newspaper Enterprise Assn.)

Politics, religion create problems for country folks

WHISKEY MAN by Howell Rains (Viking, $8.95).

Reviewed by Bernadine M. Rechner

When a political editor takes to writing fiction one expects, unreasonably perhaps, a hard-hitting, fast-paced novel.

Instead Howell Raines, political editor for the St. Petersburg (Fla.) Times, in making his novelistic debut has given us a soft-spoken, nostalgic look at the Milo, Alabama of 45 years ago.

The tiny town is the "other South" — not the posh, aristocratic plantation land often seen in fiction but the poor, white, hill country peopled by country folk scratching out a living.

"Whiskey Man" is set in the Depression; Franklin D. Roosevelt is campaigning across America by train seeking the Presidency and Prohibition is the law of the land.

Brant Laster, the central character, returns home from the University, the first in his family to graduate from college. He is renewing friendships, growing up, determining a future course for his life.

Brant has a love/hate obsession for his childhood sweetheart though the romance has officially been over for two years. Blake King also finished college, in Atlanta, where she became world-wise and unfaithful. Knowledge of her affairs turns Brant against her, yet he cannot get her out of his system either.

Brant renews his acquaintance with Ozro, the 300 pound Milo constable who enforces the law in direct proportion to the amount of public pressure exerted on him, and with "Bluenose" Trogdon.

Trogdon is the "Whiskey Man," a moonshine king who makes, and drinks, the best whiskey in the area. Trogdon's wife, Elmira, loathes him and is mesmerized by a Holy Roller preacher named Pride Hatton, a vengeance seeking rabble-rouser out to get the Whiskey Man and perhaps win Trogdon's wife in the process.

Brant's father runs the general store, quoting Scripture with each sale, and gets Brant a job clerking for the local Judge.

When the townspeople rise against Bluenose, Brant gets a view of local law enforcement. When Trogdon returns, events are set in motion that bring the book to its conclusion and determine the direction of Brant's life.

"Whiskey Man" is an easy going, leisurely kind of book — one you amble through with no compelling sense of speed. It's a good story, one you can imagine an ancient ancestor telling at the family dinner table.

The characters Raines depicts are earthy, down-home types — unpretentious, unsophisticated. They each have their own interpretation of right and wrong, of formal law and its local application.

Raines' style is as unpretentious as his characters. The narrative is a smoothly paced, rythymic tale spun by a good story teller. It is, most likely, only the first yarn to come from the imagination of Howell Raines.

Chasing Rommel among chateaux suspense thriller

by Burke Wilkinson

The scene of this taut, tense thriller is the Seine Valley in the anxious days following the Allied landings in Normandy. The German forces are fully occupied along the front lines but their counter-espionage units are as active as ever in a France stirring with new life and hope.

Operating from a small town near Chartres, British agent Simon Holbrook learns some startling information from his contacts in the French underground: Field Marshal Rommel's well-concealed headquarters are in the chateau at La Roche-Guyon, downriver from Paris.

Even more interesting is the news that this most brilliant of all German commanders goes shooting most days in the nearby forest. While the castle iteself is half-buried in rock, and almost immune from attack, Rommel and his small shooting party of four or five are vulnerable to ambush.

Simultaneously, during those July days of 1944, the German-officer plot to kill Hitler is burgeoning. Operation Valkyrie, as it is called envisages the replacement of Hitler by the much-admired Rommel, a negotiated peace, and the quick end of a war that is already lost.

So, with these two strands of neatly spliced suspense beginning to unravel, the plot becomes swift action. Holbrook requests instructions from his Intelligence chiefs in London. Knowing that Rommel is more valuable to the Allied cause alive, a cryptic answer is duly sent: "Regret must forbid you to go shooting, your pigeon will be bagged in due course." The only trouble is that Holbrook, resourceful and a bit headstrong, thinks he has been given a veiled go-ahead.

As in so many of these semi-documentary thrillers, the ultimate suspense is somewhat diminished because we know that Rommel (or De Gaulle, or Churchill) was not the victim of an assassin's bullet. Yet the thrill of the chase is such that John Tarrant's meticulous novel is not wanting in high excitement.

Lowell Thomas' fascinating new book takes you along with him to many remote places in the world, including central Siberia, the interior of New Guinea, the South Pole and an ice island 300 miles from the North Pole. His stories of unusual famous people add to the appeal of his memories of recent years. It's a great book to give for Christmas.

Stimulating guide asks evaluation of fundamentals

A GUIDE FOR THE PERPLEXED by E. F. Schumacher (Harper & Row, $8.95).

by David Pfeifer

In 1954 Joseph Wood Krutch published "The Measure of Man," which argued that man will lose his freedom if he thinks and acts as if he has none. We make man less by thinking him less. Krutch disputed the claims of psychologist B. F. Skinner, and called for a reassertion of the full humaness of man. E. F. Schumacher's "A Guide for the Perplexed," although very different, has the same aim. The author of "Small Is Beautiful" bids us cease thinking of man in small terms.

Krutch contested the claims of psychology and sociology. Schumacher contends with fundamental claims of all the sciences. They purport to tell of life, but they only report on mineral, vegetable, and animal life, not human life. Studying chimpanzees to learn about man will only lead to conclusions concerning man's animal nature, not his human nature.

What is our situation? People "long for guidance about how to live as responsible human beings, and they are told that they are machines, like computers, without free will and therefore without responsibility." The chief questions concern the nature of human nature. And modern materialistic science leaves "all the questions that really matter unanswered; more than that, they deny the validity of the questions."

Schumacher concludes, "The modern experiment to live without religion has failed. . . ."

Western and Eastern religions and philosophies are drawn upon to illustrate and prove that man has a large, currently untapped, resource in consciousness, in self-awareness. History shows time and again that insight and strength has been gained by turning within and reaching towards the spiritual dimension of the universe. Modern science (but not all scientists) denies this dimension, and thus denies what may literally save man.

At times I feel Schumacher is sounding a theme previously articulated by G. K. Chesterton, who said in effect, "The medievals, seeing religious significance in everything, may not have had railroads and radios, but they knew the meaning of life; they lived fully and deeply, because they knew what they were about; they knew the beginning and end of things, and their place in God's universe."

Schumacher never advocates going backward. He wants us to reevaluate our fundamental beliefs concerning man and the universe. His guide tells us that our perplexity has come from trying to answer human questions with animal and mineral answers. We must seek truly human answers; we must recognize that human, conscious life is important and capable of reaching beyond itself.

Schumacher's discussions of the sciences and philosophy appear simplistic. They are, but they go directly to the principal issues and reach reasonable conclusions. Some may chafe under his frequent use of philosophical and Latin terminology and his almost scholastic philosophical framework. However, if one stays with the book, the rewards are many. The message is clear and hits hard. It contains much to think about.

Whether you agree or disagree with Schumacher, he is to be thanked for asking the paramount questions and giving answers. Any debate — and I hope there is much — is all to the good.

Author promotes a bill of rights for the employe

FREEDOM INSIDE THE ORGANIZATION: BRINGING CIVIL LIBERTIES TO THE WORKPLACE by David W. Ewing, (Dutton, $10).

Reviewed by Wandalyn Rice

It had to happen. After black liberation, women's liberation and kids liberation, comes "employe lib."

David Ewing, a member of the faculty of Harvard Business School, has not written THE book that will make this a hot topic on the cocktail party circuit. No, that will be the duty of some fast-talking, glib-writing promoter who will title his book something like: "How to keep your job without ever taking orders."

Ewing is much too sensible for that kind of over-stated promotion. And for that reason, his book ought to go on the "must reading" list for corporate executives, union leaders and any average working person whose job can carry the potential for conflict between orders and private morality.

Ewing begins with the premise that, except in cases involving racial and sex discrimination or union organizing, most Americans employes are "nearly rightless" on the job. Their freedom of speech does not include the right to criticize the boss; their right of privacy does not mean a supervisor cannot search their desk; their protection against the exercise of arbitrary authority is virtually nonexistent.

To remedy that, Ewing proposes a bill of rights for employes and suggests some ways that bill of rights can be made meaningful through due process. Throughout, his calm, reasoned discussion, which cites many court cases which have already surfaced on employe rights, Ewing remains aware of the need of business to protect itself from unreasonable employe claims.

For example, point one of the bill of rights is: "No organization or manager shall discharge demote or in other ways discriminate against any employe who criticizes, in speech or press, the ethics, legality or social responsibility of management actions."

In explaining this point, Ewing says it would not protect "employes who make nuisances of themselves or who balk, argue, or contest managerial decisions on normal operating and planning matters."

Ewing's prose will not inspire anyone who wants to read great literature, but his workmanlike approach to his subject provides an interesting text on a virtually unexplored issue.

One thing can be safely predicted about Ewing's book: it will show up on many bibliographies for books which will be written on this subject in the future.

Finally, a book that focuses on female journalists

UP FROM THE FOOTNOTE by Marion Marzolf (Hastings House, $12.95).

Reviewed by Katherine Rodeghier

Marion Marzolf's thorough, well documented history of women in journalism is a book long overdue.

Currently most information about women in journalism is found scattered through countless histories and biographies, and, as Marzolf's title implies, their stories are often relegated to brief footnotes inserted at the bottom of long passages about the accomplishments of men in the field. Marzolf, through painstaking research, has re-discovered the rich history of women journalists and brought it to light.

A countless number of women in journalism are covered in Marzolf's 310-page work. She begins with the obscure "widow printers" of the colonial days in America, presents the women involved in the muckraking days of yellow journalism, continues with the sob sisters of the 1920s and the female correspondents of two world wars and the cold war, and ends up with such stars of the tube as Sally Quinn and Barbara Walters.

Marzolf also presents a chapter on the feminist press, another on women journalism educators, and another on women journalists in Europe. One of the most interesting chapters deals with the so-called "women's pages" themselves. She traces the evolution of these pages from the days when they were no more than advice and gossip columns to today's thought provoking "lifestyle" sections and she discusses the pitfalls encountered on this journey from past to present.

Marzolf not only presents biographical information on various women journalists, she discusses trends in society's attitude toward women, trends in the acceptance of women in the journalism profession, and trends in the newspaper industry as a whole.

Unfortunately Marzolf's strengths — her thoroughness and her documentation — also turn out to be her book's weaknesses. "Up From the Footnote" is not a very readable book. It is extremely academic, factually rigid, and just plain dull. Marzolf is so caught up in her research and so busy telling us about the accomplishments of women journalists that she rarely gets around to talking about their personal lives. The human element is sadly lacking. This book is written like a doctoral dissertation and, in fact, Marzolf does have a doctorate degree and teaches at the University of Michigan. Too bad she was not able to separate the roles of author and teacher.

This book will never make the best seller list, but I don't think it was ever meant to. It is basically a reference work and it will be a welcome addition on the shelf of journalism history books.

CANCER DETECTION
HEART ATTACK PREVENTION

A resting electrocardiogram is taken at the Northwest Center for Early Disease Detection, Inc. to detect any heart abnormalities.

Of every six people who get cancer today, two will be saved and four will die. Of the four who would otherwise die, one might be saved with earlier diagnosis and prompt treatment. (According to American Cancer Society publication '76 Cancer Facts and Figures.)

The health examination services available at the Northwest Center for Early Disease Detection include all cancer detection procedures recommended by the American Cancer Society, Illinois Division.

Heart Disease accounts for nearly half of all deaths each year. Unlike most Cancer, Heart Attack can be postponed through reducing one's risk factors such as diet, exercise, blood pressure, smoking, etc. Dr. Morris Collen, a well-known specialist in preventive medicine, was quoted in the January, 1977 Issue of FORTUNE "if one has a checkup every year or two at age thirty-five and thereafter, directed at postponable diseases, the mortality rate from those diseases after seven years is approximately 50 percent of what it would have been without exams."

The Northwest Center for Early Disease Detection, Inc. offers a preventive health screening examination designed for three purposes:

1. To establish a health profile for each individual to be used as a baseline for future care.
2. To analyze an individual's risk factors for heart disease and cancer and statistically forecast probable life expectancy and suggest ways it might actually be increased by reducing the risk factors found.
3. Screen for treatable disease. Early detection and prompt treatment increase the probability of a favorable outcome.

Parish's fight for survival is sensitive story

WHISPER, WHISPER by Katherine Court (Doubleday, $7.95).

Reviewed by Bernadine M. Rechner

Vatican II has had its impact on Catholics everywhere; some have strenuously resisted any attempt to change a tradition-bound church, others have embraced the modernization which Pope John XXIII wanted for his Christian community.

Katherine Court's "Whisper, Whisper" is the chronicle of Fr. Tuck Hamilton, his deteriorating inner-city parish and his determination to make St. Mark's a model of reform within the guidelines set down by the Vatican Council.

An ailing man, an ex-football star, a former U.S. congressman, Tuck Hamilton's resolve to save St. Mark's and celebrate its 100th birthday brings resistance from many quarters outside the parish.

The bishop, a sympathetic friend, is pressured by Diocesan officials to close the church because it is a financial drain on other parishes. Neither do those officials like St. Mark's "hippie" flavor — innovative liturgies, babies crawling around the aisles during Mass, popular music, some of it straight from current movies, and non-traditional instruments on which to play it.

There are internal problems as well. A newly-ordained, black curate is seeking his identity as a priest and struggling to overcome racial prejudice. The area is poverty stricken — people need jobs, food, clothing, a sense of worth. Drugs are an ever-present menace and a police raid on St. Mark's playground adds fuel to the fires of those who want the parish closed. Brooke Wilhelmi, a teenage parishioner and daughter of a gubernatorial candidate who isn't happy with St. Mark's, is kidnapped, assaulted and brought to the brink of insanity.

But Catholics from all over the city are coming to worship at St. Mark's and many of them are young people. Their faith is becoming a living, growing example of Christian love.

In this first novel, Katherine Court has written a smoothly-paced narrative with a fairly complex plot. It's a busy book full of all kinds of people doing all kinds of things. Sometimes the reader must refer to earlier pages to re-identify the characters.

Most of the characterizations are believable, though that of Walt Wilhelmi, Brooke's father, has the least depth and is the most disappointing in terms of what the reader expects from him.

Brooke's kidnapping seems to be a case of reaching for the act of God to heighten the action.

There are a few loose ends at the book's conclusion. The reader is left to surmise what happens to several of the characters though there are hints to guide us to the author's thinking.

Despite its few problems, "Whisper, Whisper" is a warm, sensitive story of Christian people translating their religious principles into everyday actions.

Humorous tales of lively people in their golden years

THE SUNSET GANG by Warren Adler (Viking, $8.95).

Reviewed by Bernadine M. Rechner

"In six months, she'd be eighty. My God, eighty. Her mind was young. Her heart was young, she told herself."

Talk to any senior citizen and chances are they'll say the same thing as Sophie Berger, one of Warren Adler's "Sunset Gang."

This book is, in essence, a series of short stories set in the Sunset Village condominiums, the common thread which holds them all together. The characters, residents of the retirement community in Florida, are Jewish but their experiences are universal.

There is the couple who find a common bond in reviving the Yiddish language of their childhood, fall in love and must confront their families with the romance.

There is Isaac Kramer, long known as "Itch" who, by losing his nickname in retirement, has lost his identity and purpose in life as well. Both are restored to him at the local laundromat.

Harold Weintraub's father really didn't approve of Harold's live-in girlfriend. When she becomes pregnant and Harold makes an unannounced visit to his father, the Weintraubs find they have a basis for understanding each other.

Seymour Shapiro, a mystery book fan, plays detective in a sad, but perhaps not unusual, story about the systematic disappearance of food from the Shapiro kitchen.

Bernie Bromberg harbors a lifelong conviction that everyone hates Jews and starts a chapter of the Jewish Defense League to picket an Arab meeting in Miami.

An "Angel of Mercy" visits the sick, the bachelor Max Bernstein is still chasing skirts, Sophie Berger's family threatens to put her in a nursing home, and two childhood sweethearts are reunited.

Members of the "Sunset Gang" are sharply drawn characters, very real individuals with their own feelings and foibles, their own wants and needs. Their experiences are often humorous, sometimes sad, sometimes pathetic but always true to life.

Adler writes in an easily readable style, sprinkling his narrative with a keen sense of Jewish ethnicity and language. His fictionalized account of the 'golden years' covers the full range of human emotions and human relationships. A particularly compelling episode deals with "successful children" and their reactions to the loneliness of aging parents.

"The Sunset Gang" is Warren Adler's fourth book. A Washington, D.C. public relations and advertising man, he has given us an entertaining, thought-provoking treatise about senior citizens and a chance to re-examine some tired old cliches about aging.

WINE TERMS

In wine tasting, the only judgment that really matters is whether or not you like it! Still, one of the enduring joys of wine for many people is talking about the wines they are enjoying. This list of common wine tasting terms will help you do that, in the accepted "language of wine."

Acidity: The quality of tartness, or sharpness in a wine. The presence of agreeable fruit acids.

Aroma: That part of a wine's fragrance originating from the grapes.

Astringency: The "puckeriness" of wines, usually derived from tannin from the skins and seeds. Moderate astringency is considered desirable in most red wines.

Balance: A pleasing proportion of sugar, acid and other constituents of wine.

Body: Consistency, thickness or substance of wine, as opposed to lack of body in a "thin" wine.

Bouquet: The part of wine's fragrance which originates from fermentation and aging.

Dry: The absence of sweetness. Not to be confused with "sour."

Mature: A wine that has developed all of its characteristic qualities.

Mellow: A "soft" wine, often with some sweetness.

Nose: Term for the total fragrance, aroma and bouquet of a wine.

Nutty: The characteristic pungent flavor of sherry.

Tart: Possessing agreeable acidity.

AMERICA'S HOUSING CHALLENGE by Roger Starr (Hill : Wang, $8.95).

Reviewed by John Frank

Millions of Americans live in substandard housing. The nation's largest cities have streets lined with abandoned buildings and slums of every shape and description.

For roughly the last thirty-five years, governments, at the local, state and federal level, have been trying to improve the housing lot of America's poor through a host of subsidies, rent controls, cut-rate mortgage programs and public housing construction.

But the problem persists and if anything, government programs have aided in creating new slums rather than in eradicating old ones.

Now Roger Starr, a former New York City housing official, has attempted to come up with an answer to these housing dilemmas with "America's Housing Challenge, What it is and How to Meet it."

Unfortunately while he has little trouble describing the problems, Starr provides little new in the way of how to meet the challenge of providing the poor with decent housing except to call for more government involvement.

Starr devoted too little time to analyzing the problem or the failings of past attempts to handle it. What began as an article in "the New Leader" has been expanded into a brisk, curt book which often presents titilating concepts but fails to follow through on them.

For instance, in speaking about the decline of neighborhoods and housing projects, Starr touches on the point that many poor families are not versed in the accepted behavior of the middle-class neighborhoods in which they hope to live.

He points out, such families may have a multitude of problems which they can not resolve and for which professional counseling is not available. But Starr does not suggest what might be called an idealistic approach of attempting to educate such families. Rather, he counsels acceptance and planning for slums.

"In short, until society has found a way to make its members live within what might be called a code of tolerable urban behavior, large cities can provide a measure of safety for the majority of their residents only by including a semi-permanent slum within their boundaries. Once again, no one likes to admit that we cannot do better; but matters are only made worse by the unrealistic claim that we can," he writes.

This sense of hopelessness regarding doing anything for the hard-core poor again surfaces when, in listing his solutions to America's housing problems, Starr suggests that unskilled urban poor should be moved to federally-constructed housing in rural areas to replace wetback migrant laborers.

"Though on its surface a rural program, nothing else would be quite so helpful to the older cities, whose primary economic problem today is the continued presence of families who can find no economically productive work where they are located," Starr writes.

The reader has to wonder how failures in reversing New York's deteriorating housing stock shaped such suggestions by a former city official.

And while he can coolly review all the failings of government housing programs, in the end, Starr can suggest nothing better than more government.

"Despite these shortcomings, despite the persistence of significant inequalities, and performance that is in many ways extremely wasteful, government activity in American housing must continue if the low-income family is to make progress toward attaining a decent home," he writes.

Starr's 130-page work does not make very convincing reading. The overabundance of jargon throughout does not even make it enjoyable reading. Starr appears as an author who has seen the future and knows it will never work.

Well organized oral history tells war memories

AMERICANS REMEMBER: THE HOME FRONT by Roy Hoopes, (Hawthorn Books, $12.95).

by Peter E. Nordahl

"Where were you and what were you doing during World War II?" Nearly 200 people were asked questions such as these. Their answers describe vividly what life was like in the United States.

Roy Hoopes and his assistants sought out people from all walks of life — government officials, movie personalities, ordinary workmen, housewives, — and recorded their reminiscences.

Chapter by chapter from Pearl Harbor to VJ-Day, he lets these citizens tell what they were doing and how they felt living on the home front.

They recalled Pearl Harbor graphically. One woman told how, standing in horror on her hillside lawn, she watched the Japanese attack planes bombing and strafing.

Anecdotes, some funny, some tragic, even success stories, fill the pages. One man who thought his rubber plant was shut down for the war's duration, went to work in Washington, ran into the right man at the right time, and won a contract which not only kept his plant open, but made it grow.

At the seaside, resort owners labored to darken their towns so enemy submarines would have no landmarks to reckon on.

Businessmen complained of red tape, recounted how many cheated or found loopholes, but they also mentioned extreme sacrifices that balanced quick profits.

When Rep. Norman Mineta was just 10, he and his Japanese-American family were sent to a detention camp. His family managed to rent their house to a friend, while others lost everything. These longtime Americans, kept by law from citizenship, still managed to be patriotic in the face of adversity.

This well-organized oral history candidly catalogs the memories of children, college students, air raid wardens, defense workers, victory gardeners, and morale builders on the home front. It makes easy, informative, and entertaining reading.

On photography

We tend to think of photography as an aspect of our own times, the great area of mass creativity, the universal hobby and so on, but anyone who remembers the old family albums from way back can be jogged into the realization, that long ago, the photograph was the basis of family communication. Photographs were taken at the slightest excuse, and on their tough embossed cards sent to all and sundry. Even one of the Napoleons, not the little one with the heartburn, a later little one with moustachios, when off to war would halt the whole army if they were passing through a town with a photo studio, so that a new pose could be recorded for posterity. Battles were abysmally late starting at the time.

When I compare this attitude to today's scattered snapshots in numerous drawers and old boxes, I think it is time to revitalize the family portrait concept, and to start with what is left of the old ones.

We've been doing that. From various members of the family we have acquired old photos, we've even figured out who many of them are thanks to the inevitable habit of the time to scribble on the back such comments as "Jessie in her new dress before she got the mumps."

Copying them is easy for anyone with a single lens reflex camera, or any other design which permits working in close-up with accurate focus and framing of the picture. In fact, if making black and white copies, the framing need not be that close. The picture can be correctly cropped when being printed.

We use a medium speed black and white film, lay the picture to be copied on a table at the window, illuminated by diffuse daylight, mount the camera on a horizontal tripod attachment so that is is pointing down vertically, and then take a meter reading from a Kodak Grey Card laid over the photo being copied. If the photo is light in tone, a direct meter reading on it will tend to be grey in the result. Use the grey card on such light toned prints, or take a reading and open up an extra f/stop.

We have also been making slides, using any spare frames of film at the end of a roll of color, to make up a slide show. Prints and slides are very welcome to other members of the family, and have been a great success.

Old photos which have yellow stains are best copied for new black and white prints through a yellow filter, and as the camera is on a tripod we can use slow shutter speeds, and medium to small lens openings. Check that camera back and photo being copied are parallel, not angled.

It is a rewarding little project, and also touching to realize through photos, that even those whom we recall vaguely as old people, were young, were lovely, and that as long as there are people, the world is young and lovely too.

The Bureau of Engraving and Printing will issue a souvenir card marking its participation in the American Stamp Dealers Association (ASDA) National Postage Stamp Show to be held in New York City Nov. 15-20.

The card depicts a block of four 6-cent airmail Wright Brothers stamp (Scott No. C45) released in 1949 and a vignette of the Wright Brothers National Memorial on Kill Devil Hill, N.C.

The bureau cards will be available by mail for $1.50 each after Nov. 16. For the first thirty days after release there is a limit of five cards per customer; orders for unlimited quantities will be accepted thereafter. The card will be withdrawn from sale on Feb. 12, 1978 unless the supply is exhausted beforehand.

Collectors should send their requests, including a check or money order to cover the cost, to "ASDA '77 Souvenir Card, Bureau of Engraving and Printing, Washington, D.C. 20228." Return address labels will facilitate order processing.

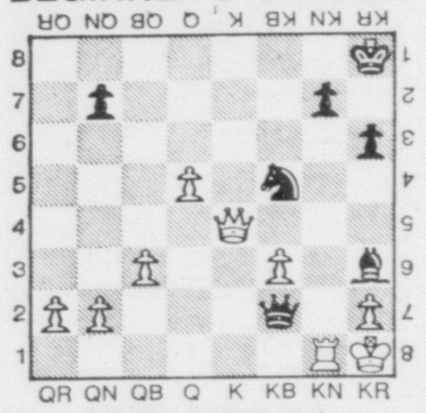
BEGINNER'S CORNER



BLACK MATES IN 4

Interviewing U.S. Champion Walter Browne, after his recent successful defense of the title, I found him "very happy" with his performance and results. Besides being champion, he was again rated number one among active U.S. players.

Restless, but thoughtful; stubbornly himself, but always changing; Walter Browne never pauses in his ceaseless struggle for the heights of chess achievement. (After so many victories and titles, is he really only 28-year-old?)

In the past a notorious time-pressure "addict," Walter had "less of a problem with the clock" in this last tournament. "I have learned to respect a time advantage," he said. "I've been studying Fischer's games, he never gets into time pressure."

The young grandmaster, though flush in the glow of his own most difficult championship defense, took time to praise the recently ailing veteran genius of chess Sammy Reshevsky, who finished in a tie for third place.

"I was amazed." "He played very well." Then Browne mischievously added: "As you know, we agreed to a draw. But I had assumed he was only close to 66 years in age, as has been officially stated. If I had known at the time, as I discovered later, that he was really two years older, I am not sure I would have so willingly yielded that draw."

First, some straight talk — Let's face it. It costs you more every year to heat or cool your home no matter what type of fuel you use. And chances are the cost will continue to rise.

Why Insulspray? — In most homes, more heat escapes through the walls than from anywhere else. New Insulspray foam insulation effectively reduces costly heat loss through walls as never before possible.

What is Insulspray? — Insulspray is a non-toxic, two-part insulation system made of liquid urea-formaldehyde resin plus a hardener containing a foaming agent.

How is Insulspray installed? — Insulspray is installed from the outside, without mess, and usually in one day. It is applied directly into the hollow stud space within the outer walls of your home. It flows up and down around obstacles and fills every crack and crevice. Insulspray leaves no uninsulated pockets.

What are the advantages? — Your home stays warmer in winter, cooler in summer. And your fuel costs drop considerably.

Show business suits actor's personality and new lifestyle

By Vernon Scott

Robert Pine, who stars as Sergeant Getraer in the "CHIPS" series, has embarked on more than a new television series.

His whole life style has changed since he landed the role in the show.

A few weeks ago Pine and his wife of eight years, Gwen, moved into an English Tudor house in the San Fernando Valley and are still unpacking crates and cartons.

The first thing he did was roll up his sleeves to set up a wood working shop. He has an awesome array of power tools, all of which will be put to use on a remodeling project.

Bob has plans to knock out walls, enlarge rooms and make some additions to their three-bedroom dwelling. He is an accomplished landscaper and mason as well as carpenter.

He built stone walls, installed a brick patio and completely landscaped the home they lived in previously.

"We like to do things ourselves," says Bob. "And that goes for the decorating, too. I believe a home should reflect the taste and personality of the family that lives in it. Gwen is a marvel when it comes to putting a house together attractively."

The Pines have a philosophy that good antique furniture costs very little more than contemporary pieces and, unlike brand new sofas, chairs and tables, antiques appreciate in value.

They try to travel abroad, especially in England, at least once a year. During their trips they haunt out-of-the-way villages and antique stores looking for bargains.

Their prize piece, however, was bought right in Los Angeles. It's an enormous French sideboard, dating back to 1780, which dominates their living room.

The Pines are the parents of a daughter, Katie, 5. A pair of cats, Maxwell and Kasha, round out the family.

Gwen is an actress who supplements the family income with television and radio commercials. But she refuses to allow her career to interfere with domestic life. She does her best to have dinner on the table when Bob gets home.

Bob is up at 6 a.m. and off to work most weekdays, occasionally the call sheet requires him to report to farflung locations, which means he must arise at 4:30. Usually he is home by 8:30, too late for dinner with Katie.

On those days when he isn't working, Bob and Gwen rehearse a play together for a local little theater.

Bob and Gwen share the cooking duties. In addition to broiling specialties on the barbecue, Bob is good at following recipes, Gwen's cheesecake is enough to send her husband into paeans of praise.

They're a sociable couple and entertain frequently. On those occasions Gwen whips up her own specialty, paella, or Bob throws a few steaks on the grill.

Because his state trooper wardrobe for the show fits him like a second skin, Bob keeps an eye on his weight. In addition to watching his diet he exercises every day.

He jogs regularly at a nearby high school track and plays racquetball with friends. Gwen stays in shape at dance classes.

The family enjoys weekend trips to Palm Springs or the mountains. On Saturdays a favorite pastime is a picnic at the beach with Katie. When Bob remains in town on weekends he plays softball with the "CHIPS" team. He's the pitcher and star.

The Pines like good music and have season tickets to the opera. Trips to the Los Angeles Music Center provide Bob the opportunity to dress in modish clothes. Otherwise he can be found in denims and sweat shirts.

Bob has sung in six semi-professional operas in Southern California and still plays the piano now and then, thanks to his parents who insisted he take lessons as a child.

A native of New York, Bob attended medical school at Ohio Wesleyan University but decided show business offered more excitement.

"I haven't any regrets about not pursuing a medical career," he says. "Show business suits my personality. But it does lack a sense of security that medicine would have provided."

What do David Soul and Paul Glaser of "Starsky and Hutch" do in their spare time? Also, how old are they?
G.S.

David Soul

Paul Glaser

David Soul is an expert skier and motorcyclist but his greatest love is music. He plays the guitar and piano, pens tunes and sings.

Paul Glaser also takes fast rides on his motorcycle and strums the guitar. Most of his spare time, however, is spent keeping fit with tennis.

Both of these active actors are "in their thirties."

Could you please tell me if Randolph Mantooth appeared in "Testimony of Two Men?"
S.B.

Randolph Mantooth

Very observant. He played the role of Father McNulty, the young priest. You may also remember seeing him in episodes of "Marcus Welby," "Adam-12," "The Men from Shiloh" and "The Senator."

Who is older, Martin Landau or Dick Van Dyke? I have a $20 bet saying that Mr. Van Dyke is older than 42, which is Mr. Landau's age.
C.B.

Dick Van Dyke

Collect your money. You win two dollars for each year of difference. You were right about Martin Landau's age, and Dick Van Dyke will be 53 on December 18.
